According to other authorities, this Confederation is estimated to have an area of 1,650,000 sq. m. (Mayer's Mexico), or of 876,000 sq. m. (Alm. de Gotha); but since both of these estimates were made, Mexico has been divested of Yucatan (declared indep. in 1845) of Upper California, and of all the territory N. of the Gila and Rio Bravo del Norte, now annexed to the United States, but formerly comprised in Chihuahua, Coahuila, Tamanlipan, & New Leon. The amount of pop. as above, though given on government authority, is professedly merely an approximation.

The great mntn. chain that enters the Confederation from Central Amer., diverges, on passing N. ward, into two arms, enclosing the plateau of Anahuac, from 6,000 to 8,000 feet in elevation, out of which rise the volcanocs Popocatepetl, Orizaba, &c., to upwards of 17,000 feet above the sea. There are numerous lakes on this table-land, the chief being that of Chapala. Coasts, especially the E., low and very unhealthy. Principal rivers, the Nueces, Tigre, Tampico, & Alvarado, flowing E. ward; and the Bolsas, Rio Grande de

Santiago, Culiacan, and Yaque, entering the Pacific; but all are much inferior in size to the Rio Bravo del Norte, which forms all the N.E. frontier. Soil extremely fertile, and products are in great variety, comprising maize, manioc, most European grains and fruits, yams, peppers, cocoa, vanilla, sugar, cotton, coffee, and other productions of tropical climates. Tobacco is a government monopoly, and raised only in a small dist. near Orizaha. The mineral wealth of the Confederation exceeds that of any part of Amer., except Pern & California. Before being indep., the country possessed 37 mining dists., with upwards of 3,000 mines, yielding annually silver to about 21,000,000 dollars, and gold to 2,000,000 do.; and it is calculated that the coinage of the Mexican mints, from their earliest establishments in 1535 to 1843, amounted to 2,068,597,948 dollars, or 448,197,800*l.* In 1840, the coin issued from its mints amounted in value to 13,134,611 dollars, exclusive of copper, which metal, and lead, tin, quicksilver, zinc, and antimony, are also plentiful. The principal mines are in the central deps. Mining is very ill conducted, and of most kinds of industry, except domestic manufs., in some of which the Indians greatly excel, few are attempted; but in 1844, it was estimated that 131,000 spindles were employed in cotton weaving, chiefly in the central and E. deps.; some leather, paper, glass, wares, & woollen stuffs, are also made, though to no great extent. The foreign commerce has greatly declined during the last dozen years. In 1833, the customs on imports amounted to about 12 million dollars; in 1839, owing to the French blockade of the ports, they fell to 3,000,000 do.; and in 1841, they reached no more than 5,287,097 do., corresponding to imports which Mayer estimates at 12,300,000 dollars,—viz., to the value of 4,500,000 dollars from Great Britain, 3,000,000 do. from France, and the rest mostly from Hamburgh, China, the U. States, Spain, and the Italian ports. The exports also he estimates at 20,000,000 dolls., of which about 18,500,000 do. were in specie, the rest being chiefly in cochineal, vanilla, jalap, sarsaparilla, and hides; the large extent of smuggling carried on, accounting for the great preponderance of the export over the import trade. In 1841, the British and Irish produce exported to Mexico from the United Kingdom, amounted in total value to 434,901*l.*, & comprised 6,158,491 yards of cotton cloth, 501,160 lbs. of cotton twist, linen fabrics to the value of 97,295*l.*, silk goods to 20,430*l.*, woollen do. to 58,410*l.*, besides earthenwares and hardwares. In the same year, the exports to Mexico from the U. States were estimated in value at 441,260*l.*, and the imports thence 711,740*l.*, of which bullion and coin stood for 419,900*l.* Principal ports are Vera Cruz, Tampico, Matamoras, and Monterey, on the Gulf of Mexico; and San Blas, Acapulco, Mazatlan, and Guaymas, on the Pacific and Gulf of California. By the "political organization," promulgated in 1843, Mexicans, with an annual income of 200 dollars, have the right to form electoral colleges, of one elector for every 500 inhabitants, the former again electing a secondary electoral college to choose deputies in the several deps., generally in the proportion of one for every 70,000 inhabs. The deputies must be 30 years of age, and have each an annual income of 1,200 dolls.; and half of the chamber is to be renewed every 2 years. The senate is composed of 63 members, 2-3ds elected by the deputy-assemblies, and the rest by the chamber of deputies, the president, and supreme court; 1-3d of this body to be renewed biennially, and senators to possess an annual income of 2,000 dollars. The executive power is confided for five years to a Mexican, upwards of 40 years of age, and assisted by a council of 17 persons, whose tenure of office is perpetual. Each deputy has also an assembly of from 7 to 11 members of the qualifications required for a deputy to congress, and whose term of office is 4 years. State religion is the Roman Catholic, and the property of the church is estimated at 90,000,000 dolls. in value. Armed force lately consisted of 19,600 men, besides a militia of 30,000. Navy consisted of 3 steam-frigates, 5 small vessels, and some gun-boats. Public revenue in 1840, amounted to 12,744,157 dollars; foreign debt 84,000,000 dollars; internal debt 18,550,000 dolls.

MEXICO, a state of the Mexican Confederation, having S. the Pacific Ocean, and on other sides the states Michoacan, Queretaro, Vera Cruz, and La Puebla. Estimated area 35,450 sq. m. Pop. 1,500,000. Surface in the N. belongs to the Anahuac plateau. Principal rivers, the Bolsas, Lerma, and Montezuma. Products very various. Cattle rearing is neglected, but mining industry is important; here are some rich silver mines, including those of Tasco and Tehuillotepec, and quarries of marble, alabaster, obsidian, &c. It has some manufs. of cotton fabrics. Chief cities, Tezcuco the cap., Toluca, Tenancingo, Lerma, & Acapulco. The city Mexico is in the separate federal dist. of the Confederation.

MEXICO, Tenochtitlan, the cap. city of the Mexican Confederation, federal dist., in a noble plain, 1,700 sq. m. in extent, enclosed by mntns., containing many fine lakes, and 7,471 feet above the sea. Lat. 19° 25' 7" N., lon. 99° 5' 0" W. Estimated pop. 200,000. When taken by Cortez in 1521, it occupied several isls. in the lake Tezcuco, and although still having the same site, it is now, owing to various causes, 2½ m. distant from the lake. It is encircled by walls, and entered by gates, to which several fine thoroughfares lead, & few cities have so imposing an appearance both externally and internally, though its suburbs are in the last degree miserable. In the city proper the houses are mostly of stone, built around court-yards, seldom more than one storey in ht., flat-roofed, and decorated by painting & mosaic work on the outside; streets regular and well-paved, but neither lighted nor watched, whence robberies and assassinations are frequent; public edifices numerous, substantial, and in good style. The great square is one of the finest in any metropolis; two of its sides are formed by the cathedral, national palace, museum, and a new mkt.-place, the other sides are bordered by arcades in front of the Parian, a kind of bazaar, by the town-hall, exchange, &c. The cathedral, 500 feet in length by 420 feet in breadth, is of mixed Gothic and Italian architecture, and gorgeously ornamented, having also a high altar with a statue of the Virgin, the dress of which is said to contain, besides other gems, diamonds to the value of 3,000,000 dollars. The national palace comprises the residence of the President, the government offices, mint, the prison, botanic garden, barracks, &c. The university is a fine old monastic building, in the court-yard of which is an excellent bronze statue of Charles IV. of Spain by Tolsa, a Mexican artist. There are between 50 & 60 churches, Franciscan & Dominican convents, a college of engineers, theatre, bull-ring, and several aqueducts; an academy of arts, public library, manufs. of gold and silver lace, silver-smiths' work, coaches, woollen and beaver goods, and a large government cigar factory.

MEXICO (NEW), a territory of the United States, North America, bounded N. by Utah & Nebraska, E. & S.E. by Texas, S. by the Rio Gila, which separates it from the Mexican Confederation, and W. by the state of California. Area estimated at 77,387 sq. m. Pop. (white) 61,632. It is traversed by the Rocky Mountains, and watered by the Rio Grande on the E., and the Colorado on the W. About 100 m. S.E. of Santa Fé are several salt lakes. The climate is generally dry, except during the rainy season, from July to October, and the country is very healthy. Agriculture is rudely conducted, and the soil requires irrigation. Maize is the chief grain, wheat is cultivated, and the vine grows well in some localities. The territory is rich in gold, copper, iron, coal, gypsum, and salt. Seven-eighths of the pop. are Indians, the others are Creoles & Americans. This country was discovered by the Spaniards in 1531, they colonized it in 1594, and worked the mines, but were driven out by the Indians, in 1680. After a war of ten years, the Spaniards re-took the country, and kept it till the independence of Mexico in 1821. It afterwards formed a dep. of the Mexican Confederation. In 1846 it was conquered by the Americans, to whom possession was confirmed at the peace of 1848. The territorial government was organised in 1850, cap. Santa Fé.—The Gulf of Mexico is an inland sea, communicating E.ward by the Florida Channel with the Atlantic, & by Yucatan Channel with the Caribbean Sea, and on other sides enclosed by the territories of the United States, Mexico, and Yucatan. Area 800,000 sq. m. Except off Yucatan and Florida, it is free from isls. or shoals, and along the coast of Mexico, it has a depth of 100 fathoms, 30 m. from shore. In the winter N. winds prevail, but the Gulf is less subject to hurricanes than the Caribbean Sea. The "gulf stream" sets into it at its S.E., & out of it at its N.E., side. MISSISSIPPI ("great waters"), the principal river of N. Amer., upwards of 1-7th part of which is drained by it and its tributaries, rises in Lake Itasca, near lat. 47° 10' N., lon. 95° 34' W., and at about 1,500 feet above the sea. Its course is mostly S. ward through the U. S. territory, between the Huron territory, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Mississippi, on the E., and the Sioux region, Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana, on the W.; and in last named state, it enters the Gulf of Mexico, chiefly through an alluvial tongue, which stretches for a long distance into the sea. Total length estimated at 3,200 m.; but from the source of the Missouri, its longest & real head stream, it is nearly 4,500 m. in extent. Its average descent from its source to its mouth, is 5 inches per mile. In the upper part of its course, it forms several cataracts, the principal being the Big-falls and the Falls of St Anthony, the latter nr. lat. 45° N., lon. 93° 20' W. It subsequently receives the St Peter, St Croix, Chippeway, Wisconsin, Roch, & Illinois rivs., & in lat. 38° 56' N., lon. 90° 15' W., it is joined from the W. by its great tributary the Missouri. Previously to this its stream is clear, and frequently from 1 to 1½ m. across; but from the influx of the Missouri to the sea, a distance estimated at 1,270 m., its waters are turbid, and its breadth is greatly diminished, though its depth is proportionally augmented. About 190 m. further down, it is joined from the E. by the Ohio, and still further Sward it receives the Arkansas and Red river from the W. Its other affls. are far less important. In all the central and lower part of its course, its bed is greatly encumbered with drift wood or snags, rafts, islands, and banks; in its latter part it traverses a flat and dreary swamp, in which stands the city of New Orleans; about 90 m. below which city it enters the Gulf by several mouths, the chief entrance for vessels being the main pass on the E. and the S.W. pass, about 18 m. distant. Sailing-ships seldom navigate it higher than Natchez, but it is available for steam boats of the largest size as high as the influx of the Ohio, its average breadth from the sea to that point being 900 yards, and average depth from 90 to 120 feet. Steamers of medium size can navigate it for 600 or 700 m. higher, & boats of 40 tons can ascend it as high as the Falls of St Anthony. No tides enter the Mississippi, but it is subject to annual inundations, both in the spring and summer, which are often attended with much hindrance to shipping, and injury to the adjacent country; but notwithstanding all this and other obstacles, the trade and navigation on its waters are even now much greater than those on most rivers of the continents in the E. hemisphere. In 1842, 450 steamers, averaging 200 tons each, were estimated to be continually engaged in traffic on the river, besides 4,000 flat bottomed boats, which, with the foregoing, made up an aggregate burden of about 2 million tons. The city of New Orleans is the great entrepôt of the trade on the Mississippi, besides which, however, the towns Baton Rouge, St Francisville, Natchez, Memphis, New Madrid, Kaskaskia, St Louis, Louisiana, and Galena, are on its banks, & numerous other towns of importance on those of its larger tributaries. — II. Mississippi, or English River, British N. America, rises in La Crosse lake, near lat. 55° 30' N., lon. 108° W., flows very tortuously E. ward through numerous minor lakes, & under the name of the Churchill riv., enters Hudson Bay 50 m. W. Cape Churchill, after a total course estimated at 630 m. Its navigation is impeded by numerous rapids. It is separated by a portage of only 370 yards from an afl. of the Saskatchewan River. Forts Nelson, Rapid River, &c., are on its banks.

MISSISSIPPI, one of the U. States of America, in the S.W. part of the Union, mostly between lat. 30° 12' and 35° N., and lon. 88° 12' and 91° 45' W., separated W. by the Mississippi river from Arkansas and Louisiana, having on other sides the states Tennessee, Alabama, and Louisiana, and S.E. ward touching an inlet of the Gulf of Mexico. Area 45,375 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 592,853. Surface in the S. and W. flat and marshy, whence it rises into a tolerably elevated region in the E.

and N. Principal rivers comprise the Yazoo, Pearl, & Pascagoula. Principal products, cotton, and sugar, in the S., maize, indigo, melons, grapes, and other fruits, tobacco, and timber. Public rev. (1848) 156,000 dollars. Principal towns, Columbus, the cap., Natchez, the chief seat of trade, and Vicksburg. The state is divided into 56 cos. Present constitution formed in 1832. Gov. elected for 2 yrs., senators for 4 yrs., & representatives 2 yrs. It sends 4 represents. to Congress. Missivri, Mesambria, a seaport town of Europ. Missouri, one of the U. S., N. Amer., mostly between lat. 36° 30' and 40° 36' N., and lon. 89° 18' and 95° 35' W., having E. the Missouri river, separating it from Illinois, Kentucky, and Tennessee; S. Arkansas, N. Iowa, and W. the territory Minnesota. Area 60,000 sq. m. Pop. (1840) 383,702, (1850) 682,043. Surface much diversified, mostly undulating, and covered with prairies. Along the banks of the Osage, and N. the Missouri river, which intersects the state from W. to E., there is a good deal of rich land. Vegetable products comprise tobacco, cotton, maize, wheat, rye, oats, barley, and the soil and climate adapt the country to yield all the products of the S. states, except sugar. Large herds of cattle, hogs, and horses are reared, and beef, pork, tallow, hides, and live stock, with lead, furs, timber, and maize, constitute the chief exports. A very rich mineral district extends over about 3,000 sq. m., around Potosi, and the lead produced in 1840 amounted to upwards of 5,295,000 lbs., besides which, iron, coal, antimony, zinc, manganese, & cobalt, are obtained. Capital employed in manufactures (1840) 2,704,405 dollars. Public rev. (1844) 217,654 dollars. It is divided into 62 cos. It sends five representatives to Congress. Constitution formed in 1820. Gov. and lieut.-gov. and senators elected for 4 years. Principal towns, St Louis, St Charles, Jackson, Winchester, New Madrid, and Louisiana.—II. a tnsbp., Missouri, co. Boone. Pop. 2,964.

MISSOURI ("mud river"), one of the principal rivers of N. America, rises by three principal sources in the Rocky mountains, lat. 44° N., lon. 110° W., close to the source of the Columbia river (Oregon territory), flows tortuously N., E., and Sward, through the centre of the continent, and in lat. 38° 56' N., lon. 90° 12' W., at about 8,100 m. from its origin, joins the Mississippi, the name of which river it thenceforth takes to the Gulf of Mexico. About 411 m. from its sources, it forms a rapid 6 m. in length, by passing through the "gates of the Rocky mountains," a gorge, bounded by granite precipices, 1,200 feet in height; 110 m. below this are its great falls. It subsequently receives its large tributaries the Yellowstone, Kansas, Platte, and Osage rivers, all from the W., besides about 200 other affls., and as high as the influx of the Yellowstone, it is 2,600 feet across, or thrice the breadth of the Thames at London. Its waters are turbid, stream rapid, and it is encumbered by numerous islands, but it is navigable for 2,570 miles above its confluence with the Mississippi, or for nearly 4,000 miles from the sea. The land around its banks is rich, and clothed with fine prairies; it is, however, deficient in timber, especially N. the influx of the Platte. On the Missouri are the military posts, Fort Mandan,

Council Bluff, and Fort Osage, and the towns Jefferson, and St Charles. [NEBRASKA.]

MONTREAL (formerly the Indian vill. Hochelega), the second city and river port, and the chief seat of commerce of Lower Canada, on the S.E. side of the isl. of same name in the river St Lawrence, 140 m. S.W. Quebec. Lat. 45° 30' N., lon. 73° 35' W. Pop. (1825) 22,357; do. (1844), with suburbs, 44,093. Of these 29,280 are Roman Catholics, chiefly French Canadians, and the remainder Protestants, and of British origin; number of houses, 6,252. Mean temp. of year 45°.8, winter 17°.8, summer 71°.4 Fahr. It is, in most respects, superior to Quebec, and divided into an Upper and a Lower town; the latter, along the river, being the trading quarter; and the former, with many fine modern buildings, the residences of the principal merchants. The Rom. Catholic cathedral is the finest church in British America, 255 feet in length, by 134 do. in breadth, faced with stone, having six towers, and capable of containing 10,000 persons. Here are also several other R. Catholic churches, and monastic establishments, the latter comprising the hôtel Dieu, and asylums of the grey & black sisters. The English church in Grecian style, Scotch & American Protestant churches, general hospital, gov. house, bank, ordnance office, 4 mkt. houses, & the colossal statue of Nelson, on a Doric pillar, in one of the squares, are principal structures. During the riots of 1849, the Parliament house and valuable library were burned. Montreal has a college, besides the University of McGill college, endowed by a citizen in 1814, and chartered in 1821; royal grammar and many other schools, public libraries, and institutions. Several newspapers are printed here, and the city exhibits a great spirit of advancement. Its position at the head of the ship navigation of the St Lawrence, renders it the chief emporium of trade between Canada and the U. States. It has a secure harbour, at which, in 1838, 98 ships, aggregate burden, 22,289 tons, entered, and 99 do., burden, 21,901 tons, cleared from; and it communicates regularly by steam with Quebec. In 1842, 128 vessels, aggregate burden 39,372 tons, cleared out of the harbour for British ports. The commerce in furs has declined, but Montreal has increasing trade in cast-iron founding, distilling, brewing, and ship-building, with factories for soap, candles, tobacco, hardwares, and floor-cloth. It was founded in 1640, and taken from the French in 1760.—Montreal Island is in the middle of the St Lawrence, and is 32 m. in length, and 10 m. in breadth.

Moscow (Russ. Moskwa), a city of Europe, former cap. of Russia, and now of the gov. Moscow, near its centre, on the Moskwa, 397 m. S.E. St Petersburg, in lat. (Ivan Veliki)  $55^{\circ} 45'$   $13''$  N., lon.  $37^{\circ} 37' 54''$  E. Pop. (1846) 350,000; elev. 781 feet. Mean temp. of year,  $40^{\circ}$ ; winter  $15^{\circ}$ ; summer  $64^{\circ}$  Fahr. It covers a large circular area, and consists of the Kremlin, or citadel, surrounded by other quarters, enclosed by walls, beyond which are several suburbs. Since 1812, it has been rebuilt on a regular plan, but it is still mostly of wood. The principal edifices were the Kremlin, the ancient residence of the Czars, and now replaced by a magnificent structure, the new Kremlin, completed in 1850, comprising several palaces, and ornamented with the finest statuary & sculpture; the orphan hospital, bazaar, cathedral, and the church of the Annunciation, in which the sovereigns of Russia are re-crowned; the church of Ivan Veliki, with a belfry, 269 feet high. The great bell of Moscow, the largest ever founded, 21 feet high, 20 feet in diameter, and weighing 1,600 tons, long buried under the soil, was raised and placed on a pedestal in 1836. Moscow is the residence of the wealthiest and most anc. noble families, the seat of a section of the senate, of a military gov.-general, and of a regency, or council of administration. It has an arsenal, containing arms for 1,000 infantry, & 1,000 cavalry, and an immense hall for exercising the troops in bad weather. The university, founded in 1705, had, in 1846, 100 professors, and 1,099 students. Moscow has a large public library, an observatory, botanic garden, and numerous scientific and literary institutions. It is the most industrious city of the empire, and is called the Manchester of Russia; its manufs. comprise cottons, woollens, and silks, in which steam machinery is employed. It has also manufs. of carpets, jewelry, and trinkets. From its central situation, and its connn. by water with all the principal cities and ports of the empire, its trade is immense. A railway is in progress to connect it with St Petersburg. Moscow, founded in the middle of the 12th century, was sacked by the Moguls in 1233 and 1293. From the middle of the 14th century, it was considered the cap. of Russia. It was taken by the Poles in 1611. In 1703, Peter the Great transferred his residence to St Petersburg; but Moscow was still regarded by the Russians as the cap. of their empire. It was occupied by the French in 1812; but after the battle of Borodino, the Russian general set it on fire, and thus compelled the French to commence their disastrous retreat.

Mean temperature of year 48°.4, winter 32° 5, summer 63° 6 Fahr. It is finely situated in a plain, and within the present century, its extent has been doubled by the addition of new quarters and suburbs around the walled city: it has a handsome and lively general appearance. In the old city numerous streets diverge from a central square, the Haupt-Platz; in the other quarters are—Max-Josephs-Platz, one of the finest squares in Europe, a fine broad line of street extending from N.W. to S.E. On its W. and N. sides are most of its principal structures; these comprise the new Pinaotheca and Glyptotheca, or museums of painting and ancient sculpture, rich in choice works of art, the former containing 300,000 engravings. The new royal palace: the cathedral, built 1468, and having two towers 333 feet in height, and a fine monument of the emperor Louis of Bavaria; the churches of the Theatines, Jesuits, St Louis, All Saints, St Kajetan, Ludwig's Kirche, and the Basilica, all richly ornamented with fresco painting and stained glass; Protestant and Greek churches, a synagogue, a fine opera house, and new post-office. In one square is an obelisk 100 feet in height, partly formed of cannon taken by the Bavarians, and in another is an equestrian statue by Thorwaldsen of the elector Max. 1. Adjacent to the palace is the Hofgarten, a space surrounded by arcades, and near this a public park. Among the public establishments are the Leuchtenberg gallery, formed by prince Eugene Beauharnois, an academy of arts, with a triennial exhibit, salaried professors & pensioned students, a magnetical and meteorological observatory. The university removed from Lands-hut in 1826, had, in 1847, 76 professors and 1,471 students, a library of 200,000 vols., & 400 MSS., and attached to it 2 colleges, and philological and theological schools, a polytechnic, and numerous other schools of art and science. The royal library occupying a stately new building, was said to have, in 1846, 600,000 printed vols., and 18,600 MSS. Here is also the Brazilian collection, made by Spix & Von Martins. All the superior courts, &c., of the Bavarian dom., are seated here. Except some bronze and iron works, silk mills, and sugar refineries, Munich has few mercantile factories of consequence, but its telescopes and mathematical instruments are deservedly famous, and it is greatly resorted to by the admirers and cultivators of the fine arts. Many newspapers and magazines are printed here. In a meadow to the W. is the colossal bronze statue of Bavaria, by Schwanthaler, 84 ft. high. Near it is the "Hall of Fame." Munich derives its name from having been founded, in 962, on a site belonging to a fraternity of monks (münchen); it was walled by Otho IV. in 1157, and taken by the Swedes under Gustavus Adolphus in 1632.

NAN-GAN, a city of China, prov. Kiang-si, cap. dep. on the Kiang, 180 m. N.N.E. Canton.

NANGASAKI, the principal seaport and commercial city of Japan, on the S.W. side of the isl. Kiu-siu, in lat. 32° 44' 8" N., lon. 129° 51' 53" E. Estimated pop. from 60,000 to 70,000. It stands on a hill slope, and is regularly built and clean. Houses of one storey, built of clay and wood, coated with cement, furnished with verandahs and Venetian blinds, and having oiled paper in place of glass. Chief edifices, are the palaces of the governors, and other grandees, the Dutch and Chinese factories, arsenal, several theatres, and upwards of 60 temples, enclosed by gardens, which, with numerous tea-houses, form the favourite public resorts of the pop. The harbour is about 7 m. in length by 1 m. in breadth, and ships lie securely sheltered in 5 or 6 fathoms water. This is the only port of Japan open to foreign traders, and the Dutch and Chinese who resort to it are confined under strict supervision to the strongly fortified and artificial island Desima, off the shore, and only 600 feet in length by 240 feet across. Shops numerous and well supplied, and here are many breweries for rice-beer. In 1825, the Dutch imports into Nangasaki, consisting chiefly of sugar, Netherland broad cloths, and cotton goods, sandal and sapan woods, buffalo hides, ivory, cloves, tin, Bengal piece goods, & other manufactured wares, amounted in value to 31,154*l.*; returns for which were made in camphor, copper, cotton fabrics, drugs, toys, silks. NANKIN, or NAN-KING ("court of the South"), a city, and the ancient cap. of China, cap. prov. Kiang-su, near the Yang-tze-kiang, about 90 m. from its mouth. Lat. 32° 2' N., lon. 118° 49' E. Pop. estimated at 400,000. Its ancient walls can be traced over hill and dale for 35 m., but Nankin has so greatly declined since the transference of the seat of empire to Peking by Kublai-khan in the 13th century, that the modern walls are of much less extent, and the city scarcely occupies 1-8th part of the surface enclosed by them, and it is commanded by hills especially on the E., and otherwise ill-calculated for defence. It is divided, as usual in Chinese cities, into a Chinese and a Tartar town, separated by walls and gates. Streets less broad than those of Peking, but handsome, clean, and well-paved. Principal objects of interest are the famous porcelain tower of 9 stories and 200 feet in height, completed in 1432 at a cost, as stated, of from 700,000*l.* to 800,000*l.*; and the "tomb of kings" (supposed to be of the Ming dynasty, A.D. 1328 to 1621), leading to which is a fine-paved road with an avenue of gigantic armed figures. The governor's palace, & an observatory, are worthy of notice. Here are important manufactures of crape, satin of the finest quality, paper, artificial flowers, China or Indian ink, and nan-keen, which hence derives its name, but is also made throughout the whole prov. It is the centre of a very extensive trade, and by the great canal which crosses the Yang-tze-kiang, about 50 m. E. ward, it communicates directly with Peking, to which city a good deal of fish is sent hence, among other articles. It is also the place of a grand viceroys, with authority over the Kiang provs., of a great military depôt, and the chief seat of literature in the empire. The British forces remained before it from the 10th to the 29th of August 1842, on which last day the final treaty between China and England was signed and ratified.

It has a port on several islands in the Loire, at the confl. of the Erdre and Sevre-Nantaise, and at the head of a railway from Tours. Nantes is remarkable for the regularity of its public squares; the town on r. b. of the Loire, communicates by 12 bridges with the isls., and the suburb Madeleine on l. b. It is a bishop's see, and has a tribunal of commerce, national college, normal school, public library of 30,000 vols., observatory, botanic garden, and a magazine of munitions for the marine. Chief edifices, a cathedral, with 2 towers 170 feet high. Castle of ancient dukes, prefecture, corn exchange, town hall, & mint. In its environs are many handsome villas. Merchant vessels of 1,000 tons are built on the Loire, & it has numerous manufs. of cottons, muslins, & woollens; cannon foundries, potteries, distilleries, and ship-building yards, and an extensive marit. commerce. The port admits vessels of only 200 tons, larger vessels unload at Paimboeuf. Nantes is the birth-place of Bouguer, the mathematician, and of Fouché. Condivicium was cap. of the Namnetes before the conquest of the Gauls by the Romans. It sustained numerous sieges, and was united to France with the rest of Bretagne. The edict of Nantes was proclaimed here by Hen. rv. in 1598. The Vendean army attacked it without success in 1793. The canal of Nantes connects the Loire and the Vilaine.

NAPLES (KINGDOM OF), (Italian Domini al di qua del Faro, anc. Magna Græcia, Campania), a political and administrative division of the kingdom of the two Sicilies, comprising the whole of the continental portion of the state (cap. Naples). It occupies the S. part of the Italian peninsula, and is situated between lat. 37° 56' & 42° 55' N., and lon. 12° 54' and 18° 33' E., bounded E. by the Adriatic, S. by the Ionian sea, W. by the Tyrrhenian sea (Mediterranean), and the Strait of Messina, and N. by the Pontif. States. Area, divisions, and pop. as follows:—

Total, . . . . .	32,619	6,882,706

The coasts are high and bold, especially on the W., and greatly indented. Chief capes, Sorrento, Gaeta, Baia, Vaticano, Nau, and Leuca. The principal gulfs are those of Gaeta, Manfredonia, Salerno, Policastro, St Eufemia, Gioja, Squillace, and Taranto, which surround the two peninsulas of Otranto and Calabria. Surface in general mountainous, but includes extensive valleys, especially the plain of Capitanata and that of Terra di Lavoro (the Campania felice of the Romans). The Apennines traverse the country nearly throughout its entire length. In the Abruzzi, where it attains its greatest height, the chain separates into three lateral ranges, which re- unite near Isernia; at Monte Caruso it again divides into two branches, the most elevated of which traverses Calabria. The culminating point of the whole is Monte Corno, 10,154 feet. The chief isolated mountains are the volcano of Vesuvius, and Monte Gargano near the Adriatic. Soil volcanic, well watered, and extremely fertile. Chief rivers, the Garigliano and Volturno, which flow W. to the Tyrrhenian sea, the Pescara, Biferno, Candelaro, and Ofanto flowing E. to the Adriatic; the Bradano, Basiento, and Crate, to the Gulf of Taranto; the only large lake is that of Celano or Fucino. On the shores of the Adriatic are many salt lagoons. Climate divided into three regions according to elevation; in the lower region the temperature is so mild that vegetation is never interrupted; in the middle region snow occasionally falls, but soon disappears; in the elevated regions of the Abruzzi, cold is sometimes severe and long continued, snow lies on the Monte Corno nine months in the year. Naples is unhealthy in the marshy districts, and during the prevalence of the sirocco from July to Sept., when the heat is excessive. The value of human life is reckoned lower here than in any other country of Europe. [EUROPE.] The flora has, in addition to the plants common to Italy, several tropical products, including cotton, the sugar cane, pistachio, and dates. The wild boar, porcupine, and game of all kinds abound in the forests, and the coasts have always been celebrated for fish. Domestic animals comprise sheep, goats and pigs; cattle are not numerous; horses are of a small breed, but active; buffaloes pasture in herds in the marshes; sheep are extensively reared in the plains of the Capitanata, and hogs and goats are numerous on the shores of the Adriatic. Agriculture, which is in a very backward state, occupies the greater portion of the pop. The chief crops are wheat, maize, cotton, melons, rice, oil, wine, hemp, lint, tobacco, and fruits. The olive is extensively cultivated in Otranto, Bari, and Calabria. The wines of Naples, which are the best in Italy, are inferior to those of France and Spain, with the exception of the celebrated Lagrima di Cristo, a red wine grown in vineyards on the flanks of Vesuvius, which belong to the crown. Oranges and lemons are grown in the Capitanata, saffron in Basilicata, the Abruzzi and Calab.-Ult; lint and hemp are generally raised to a considerable extent. Manna is an important product of Calabria, and is monopolised by the government. Silk is an important product, especially in the T. di Lavoro, the Principati, and Calabria. The tunny, anchovy, mullet, and coral fisheries employ many of the inhabitants of the coasts, but the produce is not exported. Manufs. are unimportant, the chief are silks, linens and woollens at Naples, Sora, & Isola, & paper, glass & cutlery to a small extent. Commerce is mostly concentrated in the cap. Chief exports, olive oil, silk, hemp, wool, wine, grain, macaroni, and coral. Imports colonial and manuf. goods, iron and cutlery. Previous to 1837, the 2 kingdoms of Naples & Sicily had each a species of provincial council called Consulta, but these have been since united in the Consulta generale common to both kingdoms, as all the other political institutions are. The religion of the state is Roman Catholic; convents & numeraries are very numerous. It is calculated that there is one monk for every 250 of the population. Public instruction is entirely in the hands of the priests, and all classes are deplorably ignorant. A constitutional form of government was granted in 1848; and, on procuring liberty of the press, several journals were published, but in the end of 1849, they were entirely suppressed. Public revenue (1835) 26,080,000 ducats; expenditure 26,100,000 ducats. Previous to the late insurrection in Sicily, the army comprised 48,882 men, and the naval force 1 ship of the line, 5 frigates, 9 smaller vessels, and 12 steamers, manned in all by 5,362 men. [SICILY.]

NAPLES (Ital. Napoli, anc. Neapolis), a city of Italy, cap. of the kingdom of the two Sicilies, & of the prov. and dist. of Napoli, on the N. side of the bay of Naples, at the foot of Vesuvius, 118 m. S.E. Rome. Lat. of observatory, 40° 51' 8" N., lon. 14° 15' 5" E. Pop. (1845) 379,621. Mean temp. of year 59°.6; winter 47°.6; summer 73°.1 Fahr. Naples, celebrated for its excellent climate, is beautifully situated at the bottom of the vast and picturesque bay of the same name. It rises in the form of an amphitheatre, is surrounded by walls, and defended by fort St. Elmo on the N.W., fort del Carmine, & the Castello-Nuovo, between the royal palace and the sea, and the Castello del Ovo, on a rock projecting into the Mediterranean. Streets narrow and ill-paved, except the Strada di Toledo, which is elegant. The finest promenades are the Chiaja, which extends from the Castello del Ovo to the tomb of Virgil, and the Mole. Chief edifices, a gothic cathedral, built on 100 granite columns which belonged to the temple of Apollo; the churches of the holy Apostles, built on the ruins of a temple of Mercury; San Paulo, Filippo Neri, Spirito Santo, and San Martino; the royal palace, a vast building splendidly ornamented; the old palace used as a record office; the Palazzo degli Studi Pubblico, which contains the Borbonica library, museum of antiquities, &c. Outside of the walls is a royal residence called the Capo di Monte. Naples is the usual residence of the sovereign, seat of an archbishop, and of the central administration of the kingdom, and has a commercial tribunal, arsenal, and cannon foundry, ship building yards, and a royal marine hospital. Its university, founded in 1224, had in 1841, 1,550 students. It has an episcopal lyceum, medico-chirurgical school, veterinary school, deaf-dumb institution, royal military school, schools of design and music, an observatory, a botanic garden, a mint, several learned societies, five public libraries, one of which, the Borbonica library, has 165,000 vols. and 3,000 MSS., and many public schools; but education is of the lowest kind, and not generally diffused; an exchange, ten theatres, among which the opera San Carlos, is one of the largest in Italy. Three of the minor theatres are devoted to the exhibition of Polinello (Punch). The charitable establishments comprise hospitals for the sick, aged, & foundlings, but notwithstanding its streets are infested with mendicants of all ages & both sexes. That portion of the pop. called Lazzaroni, live without domiciles, in a state of the most degrading filth, poverty, and wretchedness. The chief manufs. of Naples are macaroni, silks, embroidery, cloths and flannels, carpets, and chemical products; it has royal type foundries, and iron and glass works. It is the first port of the kingdom; its harbour is formed by a mole which extends from the centre of the city into the bay. Chief exports, agricultural produce. Imports, manuf. goods and colonial produce. Naples was founded by the Greeks, who called it Parthenope. Virgil studied here; the city, enlarged by Adrian and Constantine, was sacked by Belisarius in 536; peopled successively under the Normans, the emperors of Germany, and the kings of Spain. It has often suffered from earthquakes, and from eruptions of Vesuvius. The French took it in 1799, and again in 1805. Joseph Bonaparte was made king of Naples, but was replaced by Murat in 1808, and the latter was driven from it by the Austrians in 1814. Naples was the scene of a most disgraceful outrage in May 1848, when it was plundered by the Lazzaroni, and 1,500 lives were lost. Among the numerous objects of interest in the vicinity of Naples, are Vesuvius, Pompeii, and Herculaneum, and the isle of Capri, in its bay. A railway to Nocera, 21 m. S.E., with a branch to Castellamare, was opened in 1839; and one to Capua, 19 m. N. in 1840. From the latter, a branch extends E. 10 miles, to Nola.

Forming the W. extremity of the great plain of N. Europe, the territory is perfectly flat, with the exception of a few low hills which traverse the provs. of Gelderland, Overyssel, & Utrecht: a considerable portion of it is formed of alluvium, or rescued by human industry from the sea, below the level of which much of it is situated. From the point of the Helder to the Hoek van Holland, at the mouth of the Maas, 78 miles, the coast is partly protected by natural downs, about 40 feet in height, composed of fine sand upheaved by the sea, and fixed by plantations of sea-grass (arundo-arenaria); on the other parts of the coast, especially in Zeeland, Friesland, and Gelderland, the sea is confined by enormous artificial dykes. The principal gulfs of the German Ocean, on this coast, are the Zuyder Zee, the Lauwer Zee, and the Dollart. The principal rivers are the Rhine, Maas, & Scheldt: on entering the Netherlands, the Rhine separates into two branches, the S. most of which, called the Waal, flows W. 45 m., and joins the Maas near Gorcum; whilst the other, called the Rijn (Rhine), flows N.W. 6 m. to near Westervoort, where it again divides: the New Yssel on right, flowing N. 65 m. to the Zuyder Zee, and the Beneden Rijn on left, flowing W. 30 m. to Wyk-by-Duurstede. Here the Rhine again separates: the main stream called the Leck, or Lek, after a W. course of 35 m., joins the Maas 7 m. E. Rotterdam, while a branch on right called the Kromme Rijn, flows N.W. to Utrecht: here the Rhine splits for the fourth time, the right branch called the Vecht, flowing N. to the Zuyder Zee, and the left, called the Old Rhine, W. past Woerden and Leyden, 35 m. to Katwyk on the German Ocean. [MEUSE—SCHELDT.] The chief lakes are those of Haarlem (now being drained) and the Y. Marshes are numerous, and some of them, as the Bourtange and Peel morasses in the E., are very extensive. The islands form two principal groups; one situated in the estuary of the Scheldt and the Meuse, comprises N. and S. Beveland, Walcheren, Tholen, Schouwen, Over Flakkee, Voorn, Beyerland, Ysselmonde, &c.; the other, at the entrance of the Zuyder Zee includes the Texel, Vlieland, Ter-Schelling, and Ameland. There are several small islands in the Zuyder Zee. Climate less extreme than in N. Germany. Mean temp. of year (at Amsterdam) 49° 8, winter 35° 6, summer 64° 4 Fahr. Snow not very abundant. The canal from Amsterdam to the Helder is frequently frozen for 3 months in the year, and the Zuyder Zee is frequently frozen over. Atmosphere humid, especially in the W. provs. Winds generally strong, and tempests frequent in winter and spring. Prevailing winds N. and N.E.; when W. and N. winds are violent, they cause inundations by accumulating the waters of the sea upon the coasts, or by repelling that of the rivers. The great amount of stagnant water, would render the country uninhabitable but for the strong winds which purify the atmosphere. The soil is argillaceous, has no minerals except a little bog iron, but immense deposits of turf & potters' clay. No stone of any size is to be found in the soil; and, though generally speaking, not a wooded country, large trees are by no means rare in Holland. The most fertile provs. are those of the S., & the least so those of the N., a large tract of the formerly barren heath on the E. has been brought under culture by the pauper colony of Frederick's Oord; 3-4ths of the land are in pasture. Corn raised is insufficient for home consumption. The chief crops are rye, buckwheat, barley, and oats; wheat is cultivated chiefly near Utrecht, in Friesland, and Zeeland; vegetables, madder, millet, and horse radish, in the last 2 provs.; flax is extensively cultivated in the S. provs., tobacco in Utrecht and Gelderland, and the vine in Luxemburg; potatoes, hemp, rape-seed, chicory, mustard, hops, and beetroot, are cultivated generally. The flora resembles that of other European countries situated in the same lat., but aquatic plants are more varied and extensive. Horticulture has long been a favourite employment of the Dutch, especially at Haarlem, which still exports a considerable number of tulip and other flower roots. Rabbits are very abundant, as well as water fowl and reptiles in the marshes. Storks are numerous, and almost superstitiously revered in some districts, and means are taken to prevent the destruction and augment the number of these useful birds. The coasts abound in cod, turbot, sole, and other flat fish. The cattle of Holland are much esteemed,

& the draught horses are excellent. Dairy work is the chief branch of rural industry; butter and cheese are in great repute, and form objects of extensive commerce. The fisheries formed the origin of prosperity in the Netherlands, and the herrings prepared by the Dutch still maintain their superiority. In 1842, 1,603 boats, manned by 8,280 men, were employed in this fishery. The whale fishery in the sea of Spitzbergen, has been profitably carried on since the 16th century. The manufacturing industry of the country is very active, Holland having long been celebrated for its linens, velvets, and paper; and during the 17th and 18th centuries, its typography enjoyed a well merited reputation. The absence of coal, and the prevalence of strong winds, have led to the adoption of the wind mill as a motive power, and it is universally employed in all kinds of work. The chief manufs. are linen of the finest quality, woollens, silks and velvets, paper, leather, cordage, bats, ribbons, saltpetre, and tobacco. The manuf. of cotton has been recently introduced. There are numerous distilleries of "Geneva" (rather jenever, from the juniper berry, with which the gin is flavoured), or "Hollands," and extensive bleach-fields, brick and tile works. Holland presents the appearance of an immense network of canals, which form the usual access not only to towns and vills, but even to private mansions. The most important is that of N. Holland, between Amsterdam and the Helder, the finest work of the kind in Europe, 50 m. in length, 125 ft. broad at the surface, and 21 feet in depth. By means of this important work, ships bound for Amsterdam avoid the danger and delay of navigating the Zuyder Zee: it is spacious enough to admit two frigates abreast. Since not only the surface but the bed of many of the canals is above the level of the land, the drainage of the polders or meadows, through which they pass, is an object of great solicitude; it is effected by means of pumps worked by wind mills. In a country where human industry is engaged in a continual struggle with the sea, from the domains of which it has been conquered, the management of dykes, canals, & roads, is a special object of attention on the part of the government. The roads, which are always formed on the dykes, and bordered by canals, are excellent. In 1849 lines of railway were completed from Amsterdam W. to Haarlem & S. to Leyden, the Hague and Rotterdam, & S. & E. by Utrecht to Arnhem. The principal imports consist of colonial products and manuf. goods, corn, wines, cotton, wool, dried fish, and hides. Chief exports are butter, cheese, gin, the manufs. of the country and colonial produce. (For details on trade, &c., see M'Culloch's Commercial Dict., & the Moniteur des Indes Orientales for 1847-8-9.) With few natural resources, the inhabitants of Holland were driven to commerce as a matter of necessity. At the end of the 16th century, they gained possession of the Molucca islands, and secured a monopoly of the spice trade; at the end of the 17th century, nearly half of the shipping of Europe belonged to Holland, but in consequence of the wars in which she was at that time engaged, and the increase of the mercantile navies of other countries, she soon lost her commercial pre-eminence. Holland took an active share in the wars against Louis XIV. It was conquered by the French at the commencement of the revolution, and in 1795 formed the Batavian republic; in 1806 it was made the kingdom of Holland, which Napoleon reduced to a dep. of France in 1810. After her incorporation with the French empire, Holland was deprived of all her colonies in the eastern seas. At the establishment of peace in 1814, these colonial possessions were restored, and a period of commercial prosperity succeeded. Holland and Belgium were then united into a single kingdom; but this union of two countries, betwixt which no sympathy existed, was broken by the revolt of Belgium in 1830. By the treaty of London, 19th April 1839, Belgium ceded to Holland a portion of Luxemburg and Limburg. The Dutch occupy the country of the ancient Batavi and Frisii; their language is a dialect of the German. Flemish is still spoken in the S. The greater number of the inhabitants are Protestants, belonging to the Reformed Church, the Arminian or Remonstrant, Lutheran, & Baptist, denominations. The Reformed Church (by far the most numerous body, & of which the reigning family are members) is Calvinistic in point of doctrine, and its form of government is Presbyterian. (For details see Dr Steven's View of the Dutch Ecclesiastical Establishment.) The government pays the salaries of several British Presbyterian ministers settled in Holland, and whose churches are incorporated with the Dutch Reformed Church. There are also many Roman Catholics and Jews. The greatest toleration has always existed in regard to religion. The Roman Catholics are under the bishops of Utrecht. Education is well conducted & very generally diffused. The teachers are placed under the guardianship of 70 inspectors, who act under an inspector-general, depending on the minister of the interior; they grant licenses for the establishment of schools, and present to the government, 3 times a-year, an account of the state of public instruction. In 1846 there were in Holland 3 universities, at Leyden, Groningen, and Utrecht; 2 atheneums, & 68 latin schools. For elementary instruction, there were 70 district, 2,125 communal, and 630 private schools. The ecclesiastical schools comprised 6 Roman Catholic and 2 Protestant seminaries; 1 Jewish school; there are 3 military, 1 naval, & 1 veterinary school, & numerous academies of the fine arts; 2 institutions for deaf mutes, and one for the blind. The proportion of attendance at school is 1 in 8 of the entire country; while in Drenthe and Overysse the proportion is 1 in 6. The benevolent institutions comprise numerous hospitals for the sick & infirm, & for orphans; societies of public good, and several pauper colonies. Mendicity is interdicted throughout the kingdom. The people are remarkable for the extreme cleanliness of their streets and dwellings. The government is a constitutional representative monarchy, the title of the sovereign is King of the Netherlands, Prince of Orange Nassau, Grand Duke of Luxemburg and Duke of Limburg. The usual residence of the king is at the Hague. The Dutch afford a very remarkable example of industry and perseverance: to a country almost floating on the waters, they have given a firm foundation; without stone, and with comparatively little timber, in their dominions, they have built spacious cities; and though nearly destitute of arable land, their towns have often been granaries for surrounding states. With a territory not much larger than Wales, these people have maintained an army, a fleet, & a commerce, ranking high among the states of Europe. The standing army in 1849 consisted of 1 reg. of grenadiers, 8 regs. of infantry, and 5 regs. 2 squadrons of cavalry, and 3 bat. of artillery. Navy, 1st Jan.

1848, 7 ships of the line (1st class, 84 guns); 5 ships (2d class, 74 guns); 18 frigates, and smaller craft; in all 105 vessels, with 2,391 guns, and 74 gun-boats. Public rev. (1848) 79,229,114 florins (6,602,426*l.*), of which amount nearly half is raised by direct taxation and excise duties. Expenditure 71,525,934 florins (5,960,500*l.*). National debt 102,411,822*l.* The marine force in actual service on 1st Jan. 1849, comprised 5,880 men, exclusive of those in the colonies. The merchant marine, on 1st January 1848, comprised 2,061 vessels, aggregate burden 19,749 lasts. The following table shows the extent and pop. of the colonial possessions of the Kingdom of the Netherlands, as estimated for 1849:—

The Netherlands is a name, which, for several centuries, was applied to the countries now forming the kingdoms of Belgium, and the Netherlands, and part of the N. of France (deps. Nord and Pas-de-Calais). This country belonged almost entirely to Charles v. United to Franche-Comté, it formed the circle of Burgundy. From this 7 of the N. provs. separated themselves in 1579, and formed the Republic of Holland, or the 7 United Provs. Part of the low country was conquered by Louis xiv., and called the French Netherlands; the rest, first under the dominion of Spain, passed it 1714 to that of Austria, and was called Spanish Netherlands, Austrian Netherlands, or Belgium.

NEUCHÂTEL, or NEUFCHÂTEL, a frontier canton of Switzerland, in the N.W., having S.E. the Lake of Neuchâtel, and on other sides France and the cants. Bern & Vaud. Area 281 sq. m. Pop. (1837) 58,616, mostly Protestants. The Jura mountains intersect it from S. to N., and the river Doubs bounds it on the N.W. Pastures occupy most part of the surface. Along the lake are numerous vineyards, and good wines are exported to the adjacent Swiss cantons. Except in wine, kitchen vegetables, and hay, the vegetable products are insufficient for home consumption, and corn is imported from the cants. Bern and Basle. Many cattle are reared, and cheese is an export of consequence. From 18,000 to 20,000 hands are more or less employed in watchmaking, in both the urban and rural districts, and some years ago from 100,000 to 120,000 watches, of which 35,000 were of gold, were estimated to be annually produced, and sent into all parts of Europe, to America, &c. The capital engaged in this manufacture was estimated at 386,000*l.* Cotton fabrics for export to Holland, Prussia, Belgium, and Italy; hosiery, cutlery, and metallic wares generally, are other chief manufs. Until 1848 Neuchâtel acknowledged the sovereignty of Prussia, but a revolution having then occurred, it is now a democratic member of the Swiss confederation, in which it holds the 21st place. Principal towns are Neuchatel, Chaux-de-Fonds, Valengin, and Le Locle.

NEUCHÂTEL (Germ. Neuenburg), a town of Switzerland, on N.W. shore of the Lake Neuchâtel, 25 m. W. Bern. Pop. 5,900. It has an anc. castle, the former residence of the dukes of Neuchâtel, a cathedral of the 12th century, a town hall, with a public library, an orphan asylum, founded in 1722, several hospitals, a college, & a collection of natural history. The town is well built, and has broad paved streets; a church of the reign of Henry VII., and several well-endowed poor's hospitals; some manufs. of ribbons, and numerous corn-mills and malt-kilns. Corp. rev. (1827) 1,123*l.* It was formerly noted for its manufs. of woollens. The house and factory of its famous clothier, "Jack of Newbury," who liberally aided Henry VIII., and was a great benefactor of the town, are still standing. Two severe actions were fought in the vicinity, in 1643 & 1644. Donnington Castle, on the N., was the property of the poet Chaucer, who died here A.D. 1400. The N. part of town, Speenhamland, was the anc. Spinax.

NEWBURY, several tnshtps., U. S., N. America.—I. Vermont, 19 m. S.E. Montpelier. Pop. 2,578.—II. Massachusetts, 33 m. N.N.E. Boston. Pop. 3,789.—III. Pennsylvania, co. and 12 m. N. New York. Pop. 1,850.

NEWBURYPOND, a port and township, U. S., N. Amer., Massachusetts, at the mouth of the Merrimac river, 38 m. N.E. Boston. Pop. 7,161, partly employed in fisheries. It is well built, and has a custom-house, court-house, and jail.

NEWBY, a tushp. of Engl., co. York, W. Riding, pa. Clapham, 7½ m. N.W. Settle. Pop. 890. Some smaller townships in Engl. have this name.

NEW CALEDONIA. [CALEDONIA (NEW).]

NEWCASTLE, a vill., U. S., N. Amer., Delaware,

5 m. S.S.W. Wilmington. Pop. 2,737. It has large establishments for steam engines, &c.; a court house, jail, mkt. house, & several churches.—II. a tushp., Maine, 22 m. S.E. Augusta. Pop. 1,712.—III. a town of Upper Canada, on the N. shore of L. Ontario, 85 m. E.N.E. Toronto. The dist. of which it is the cap., between Midland and Home dists., comprises nearly all the basin of the Trent, and had, in 1835, a pop. of 30,245.—IV. a bor. of New S. Wales, E. Australia, co. Northumberland, on Port Hunter, 70 m. N.N.E. Sydney. It has valuable coal mines, whence large quantities of coal are annually exported.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, Pons Æli, afterwards Monkchester, a parl. and munic. bor., town, and riverport of Engl., cap. co. Northumberland, & a co. of itself, on the N. bank of the Tyne, across which it communic. with Gateshead by a bridge of 9 arches, 53 m. N.E. Carlisle; also with a station on the Great Northumberland railway, & 16½ m. N. Durham. Area of town and co. 2,000 ac. Pop. of parl. bor. 69,430. It stands mostly on declivities rising steeply from the vicinity of the river, and early in the present century it consisted of little more than a collection of narrow, ill-built, and inconvenient streets; but within the last twenty-five years it has been rendered one of the handsomest towns in England, by the enterprise of Mr Grainger, a builder and native of the town, whose improvements are conjectured to have cost between one and two millions sterling. The public market, occupying nearly 3 acres; the new exchange, with 3 Corinthian fronts, and containing a news room and exhibition rooms of the N. of England Society of Fine Arts; the theatre, new music hall, arcade, a long Corinthian edifice, occupied by banks, public offices, auction rooms, and chambers, are also works by Mr Grainger; and at the head of Grey Street is a column 136 feet in height, supporting a statue of Earl Grey, by Bailey. The Moot hall, or assize court for the co. Northumberland, in the style of the Temple of Theseus at Athens; the guild hall and old exchange, mansinn-house, custom-house, police office, town jail, erected at a cost of 47,000*l.*; Pandon Dean bridge, across a deep glen; the public baths, assembly rooms, racket court, and barracks for 1,000 men, are among the principal public edifices. St Nicholas' church, in the decorated English style, and 220 feet in length, has an elegant steeple 201 feet in height; St Andrew's and St John's, are both interesting edifices, & the former has an altar piece by Giordano. All Saints' is a handsome modern Grecian structure, with a spire 202 feet in height; St Thomas' chapel, the Scotch church, the Rom. Catholic, & several Methodist chapels, are worthy of notice. Dissenters are numerous, possessing 24 out of 30 of the places of worship. The wall of Hadrian passed through the site of the town, and several of its remaining towers are employed for halls of corporate trades. The castle, whence the town derives its name, is a superior structure, founded by Robert of Normandy; and in the time of the historian Leland, Newcastle was the most strongly defended town in England. It is now chiefly noted as the principal centre of the English coal trade. Within a radius of 8 m. 50 coal pits are wrought; and in 1840, the coal trade empl. 1,327 vessels, manned by 13,548 seamen. Extensive manufs. of bottle and window glass, steam and other machinery; leather, soap, iron wares, sheet lead, & chemical products, with ship and boat building, rope and sail making, malting, brewing, &c., are carried on; and metal from the Stanhope mines, bricks, tar, and grind-stones are among the exports. The port comprises all the navigation of the Tyne, with Seaton sluice and Blyth creeks. Reg. shipping of port (1847) 314,700 tons. Customs rev. (1847) 488,760*l.* It communicates by large steam vessels with Leith, Berwick, Whitby, Scarborough, Hull, and London; by the Great North of England railway with Darlington & York; North British with Scotland, and by other railways with Shields and Sunderland. Newcastle is the seat of literary and philosophical, natural history, antiquarian, law, medical, botanical, and other societies, of one of the provincial medical schools in England, a Trinity house, a royal grammar school, numerous other institutions for education, a large infirmary, a dispensary, lying-in-hospital, lunatic asylum, a great variety of endowed charities, quarter and petty sessions, mayor's, sheriff's, conscience, and river courts, and assizes and quarter sessions for Northumberland. Corp. rev. (1848) 62,491*l.* It sends 2 members to H. of C. Reg. elects. (1848) 5,041.—II. (Under Lyme, or Lyne), a parl. and munic. bor., town, and pa., co. and 15 m. N.N.W. Stafford, and about 4 m. N.E. the Whitmore station of the London and North Western railw. Area of pa. 640 ac. Pop. 9,888; pop. of town, 10,038. Houses mostly anc., but streets paved. It has 2 churches, a very handsome Rom. Catholic chapel, a grammar school, founded in the reign of Elizabeth; alms-houses, and numerous other charities; a guild hall, market house, theatre, public library, literary institution, public promenade, union workhouse; extensive manufs. of hats, some silk and cotton factories, & in the vicinity potteries, iron works, and large collieries. A branch canal connects it with the Grand Trunk navigation. Mkts., Monday and Saturday. Corp. rev. (1848) 796*l.* It sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 1,047. It is a polling place for the co., and gives the title of Duke to the Pelham-Clinton family. Of the castle built here by the Earl of Chester, in 1180, and whence the town takes its name, but slight traces remain. Near it is Trentham, the seat of the Duke of Sutherland.—III. a pa. of S. Wales, co. Glamorgan, adjoining Bridgend. Pop. 1,239.—IV. (Little), a pa., co. Pembroke, 9 m. N. Haverfordwest. Pop. 431.—V. (In-Emlyn), a mkt. town of S. Wales, co. Carmarthen, pa. Kenworth, delightfully situated on the Teify, 9 m. E.S.E. Cardigan. Pop. 1,049. It has a union workhouse, and ruins of a castle.

NEW-FOREST, a royal forest and hundred of Engl., occupying most part of the S.W. portion of the co. Hants, W. Southampton-water. Circ. of forest about 50 m. It is divided into balliwicks, under foresters, wood-wards, and rangers, the whole under a lord-warden, whose forest-courts are held at Lyndhurst. It abounds in game, red-deer, hogs, semi-wild horses, and excellent timber, especially valuable from its proximity to Portsmouth dockyard. Crown rev. (1846) 9,228*l.*

NEWFOUNDLAND, an isl., and one of the British colonies, N. Amer., off the E. coast of Labrador, mostly between lat. 46° 40' and 51° 37' N., and lon. 52° 25' and 59° 15' W., separated from the mainland by the strait of Belleisle, 12 m. across. Estimated area 35,850 sq. m., and pop. (1845) upwards of 96,000. Shape very irregular, & shores greatly indented. The country in the E. is generally low, W. ward more rugged and mtinous, and especially so in a peninsula which extends from the N. toward Labrador; principal navigable rivers, the Humber and the River of Exploits, which latter rises in lake Bathurst, one of several considerable lakes in the interior. Climate in the winter very severe, the thermometer frequently falling to 30° below the freezing point; in summer there is a brief hot season; the colony is generally healthy. Surface mostly marshy, or covered with a scrubby vegetation, and the soil is ill-suited to agriculture. Kitchen vegetables are accordingly the principal crops raised; pasturage is however plentiful, and the plains abound with vast herds of caribbo deer, which, with the famous Newfoundland breed of dogs, wolves, bears, foxes, and some beavers, constitute the prevailing animals. Timber is scarce; the principal resources of the pop. are in the cod, seal, and salmon fisheries, the chief fishing grounds being off the S.E. coast. The great bank of Newfoundland on this side, is the most extensive submarine plateau yet discovered, being about 600 m. in length, and in some places 200 m. in breadth, with a depth, varying from 25 to 95 fathoms, and a bottom of solid rock. The principal fishing ground is over this bank between lat. 42° and 46° N. In 1843, the exports from Newfoundland comprised 936,200 quintals of dried fish, worth 512,194*l.*, upwards of 3,100,000 galls. of oil worth 335,975*l.*, seal skins to 40,947*l.*, salmon to 12,216*l.*, and herrings to 4,570*l.* The seal fishing has become important within the present century, and in the above year employed 106 vessels, and upwards of 3,000 hands. In 1844, 1,171 ships, aggregate burden 130,220 tons entered; and 1,084 ditto, burden 122,261 tons left the ports of the colony. In 1845, the exports to Great Britain amounted in value to 875,151*l.*, & the imports thence to 654,503*l.* Reg. shipping of colony (1844) 53,944 tons. Since 1832, the colony has had a representative assembly of 15 members, with an executive council of 12 members, appointed, like the governor, by the crown. Public rev. (1846) 57,129*l.* The colony has lately been erected into a Protestant see, but most of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics. St Johns, the cap., on the S.E. coast, is the only town worthy of notice.

NEWHALL, a tushp. of England, co. Chester, pa. Acton, 4 m. S.S.W. Nantwich. Pop. 936.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, one of the U. S., N. Amer., in the N. part of the Union, mostly between lat. 42° 40' & 45° 20' N., & lon. 70° 30' & 72° 35' W., nearly enclosed by Maine, Vermont, and Massachusetts, having S.E. only 18 m. of marshy coast. Area 9,280 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 317,864. In the N., it comprises the loftiest ground in the U. S.; Mt. Washington is 6,428 feet in height, and the region around it is well timbered; elsewhere the surface consists in a great part of open plains, and is more adapted for a grazing than a corn raising country. Principal rivers, the Merrimac and Connecticut, which latter forms all its W. boundary. Near its centre is lake Winnipiscogee. Products comprise maize, wheat, & other grains, hops, potatoes, maple-sugar, timber, cattle, salted provisions, and wool; but this is becoming more a manufacturing, than an agricultural state. Principal manufs. are of woollen and cotton fabrics, iron wares, and paper; total capital employed in manufs. in 1840, 9,252,448 dolls. Foreign trade inconsiderable and decreasing, its produce being mostly exported through Massachusetts and Connecticut. Value of exports (1843), at its sole port of Portsmouth 31,420 dollars; of imports 6,685 ditto. Besides this town, it contains Concord (its cap.), Nashua, Dover, and Hanover. Public rev. about 60,000 dollars annually. It has no debt. It sends 5 representatives to Congress.

NEW HANOVER, a region forming the coast line of Brit. N. Amer., along the Pacific Ocean, between lat. 50° and 54° N., having N. Russian America, S. Vancouver's isl. & Queen Charlotte's Sound.—II. an isl., Pacific Ocean, in lat. 23° S., lon. 150° E., and separated by a narrow strait on its N.E. from New Ireland.—III. a co., U.S., N. Amer., New Carolina, in its S.E. part bordering the Atlantic Ocean. Area 995 sq. m. Pop. 13,312.—IV. a tushp., Pennsylvania, 74 m. E. Harrisburg. Pop. 1,419, chiefly Germans.—V. a tushp., New Jersey. Pop. 3,045.

NEWHAVEN, a small seaport and pa. of Engl., co. Sussex, on the Ouse, at its mouth in the English channel, on a branch of the S. coast railway, 4 m. S.E. Lewis, and E. Brighton. Area of pa. 710 ac. Pop. 955. The town is neatly built, has a church, a drawbridge across the Ouse, small fort, and a pretty good harbour. Exports agricultural produce; imports coal and foreign timber. Customs rev. (1846) 13,480*l.* Shipping 1,197 tons.—II. a quoad sacra pa. and marine vill. of Scotland, 2 m. N. of, and connected with, Edinburgh, by Northern railw. Pop. 2,103, partly employed in fishing. There is a good stone pier, and a chain pier at Trinity 500 feet long. The vill. belongs to the city of Edinburgh; 1 m. W. is Granton, a vill. with a splendid pier and harbour, erected by the Duke of Buccleuch, and frequented by the London steam packets, and the steam-boats on the passage of the Edinburgh, Dundee, and Perth railway.

NEWHAVEN, a city & seaport. U. S., N. Amer., and with Hartford, the joint cap. of Connecticut, on an inlet of Long Island Sound, 34 m. S.S.W. Hartford. Lat. of Yale College, 41° 18' 5" N., lon. 72° 56' 5" W. Pop. (1850) 22,539. It stands in a plain, and is elegantly built on a regular plan. Public edifices comprise numerous churches, Yale College, which, in 1840, had 550 students, a library of 33,000 volumes, the finest mineralogical cabinet in the United States, an anatomical museum, the new state house, state hospital, museums, academies, & benevolent institutions; and it has a beautiful public cemetery. The harbour is furnished with fine wharfs, and the coasting, fishing, & foreign trade is large. Reg. shipping of port 1840, 11,500 tons. Steamers ply daily to New York; a railway connects the city with Hartford, and Farmington canal with Northampton and other ports of Massachusetts. It has manufs. of woollen cloths, leather, rope, machinery, and hardware.—II. a tushp., Vermont, 60 m. W. Montpelier. Pop. 1,503.—III. a tushp., New York, 10 m. N.E. Oswego. Area 3,260 ac. Pop. 475.—III. co. and 9 m. S.E. Oxford. Area 3,080 ac. Pop. 471.—IV. (Bagpath), co. Glo'ster, 5½ m. W.N.W. Tetbury. Area 1,700 ac. Pop. 278.—V. (South), co. Oxford, 4 m. W.N.W. Deddington. Area 1,460 ac. P. 434.

NEW JERSEY, one of the U. S., N. Amer., in the E. part of the Union, mostly between lat. 39° and 41° 24' N., and lon. 74° and 75° 30' W., having E. the Atlantic Ocean, N. New York, and W. Pennsylvania and Delaware, from which it is separated by the Delaware river. Length 163 m., breadth 52 m. Area 6,900 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 489,333, of these 23,093, are free coloured. Surface level in the S., undulating in the centre, crossed by the Alleghany mountains in the N. The Hudson river forms its N.E. boundary. Principal crops, wheat, oats, maize, rye, and potatoes. In the hilly parts many cattle are reared, and cheese, butter, and wool, are important products. Iron, building stone, and sand, are the chief mineral products. Manufs. of cotton and woollen goods, iron wares, paper, leather, and earthenware, are important; and in 1840 the capital employed in manufs. was estimated at 11,517,582 dollars. New York and Philadelphia are the principal outlets for the exports, and channels of its import trade. In 1848 the railways completed in this state had an aggregate length of 202 m., they communicate with several in Pennsylvania, and the state has several canals, of which Morris canal, 101 m. in length, connecting the Hudson and Delaware rivers, is the principal. Public rev. (1848) 116,200 dollars, which was more than adequate to the expenditure; and there is little, if any, public debt. New Jersey sends 5 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Trenton, the cap., Newark, Burlington, & Jersey. It has a college, several theological seminaries, 66 academies, and 1,207 primary schools. The state is divided into 18 cos. The original constitution was formed in 1776. The present, formed in 1844, provides for a government chosen for three years, a senate composed of one member from each co., and an assembly of 60 mems. Bergen co. was first colonized by the Dutch in 1614.

Amer., cap. state Louisiana, & next to New York, the principal commercial entrepôt of the Union, in the S. part of which it is situated, on the N. bank of the Mississippi, 105 m. from its mouth in the Gulf of Mexico. Lat.  $29^{\circ} 57' 7''$  N., lon.  $90^{\circ} 8' W$ . Mean temp. of year  $69^{\circ} .8$ , winter  $55^{\circ} .8$ , summer  $82^{\circ}$  Fahr. P. (1830) 46,310, (1840) 102,193, (1850) 119,285, many of French & Spanish descent. It stands in an alluvial flat, considerably below the level of high tide in the Mississippi, which has been embanked for a long distance, to prevent inundation. Adjacent swamps render it very unhealthy in summer, and it frequently suffers from yellow fever. It consists of the city proper, and 6 fauxbourgs or suburbs, all regularly laid out, well supplied with water, and as well drained as circumstances admit. Except Canal Street, few of the public thoroughfares are more than 40 feet in width. Houses mostly of brick, many stuccoed, and in several quarters they are furnished with balconies, and similar in architecture to the dwellings in France & Spain. Here are fewer churches comparatively than in any other city in the U. States; and from the scarcity of steeples, and of remarkable public buildings, New Orleans makes little figure at a distance. Principal edifices, a large and fine Roman Catholic cathedral, with 4 towers, the state house, custom house, 2 exchanges, U. States' mint, & land offices, several hospitals, 3 theatres, the Ursuline convent, college, & orphan asylum. The levee, on summit of the embankment along the river, forms a fine esplanade, and ships of the largest size can discharge their cargoes close to the bank. New Orleans is the main outlet for the produce of the countries watered by the Mississippi and its tributaries, and the great port for the shipment of cotton, of which article, in the year 1843-4, 895,375 bales were exported, 488,817 do., being destined for Liverpool, 21,265 do. for Glasgow and Greenock, and 107,973 do. for Havre. In the same year 81,249 hds. of tobacco, chiefly sent to Spain, Boston, & England, 34,395 do. of sugar, 300,082 barrels of flour, 393,179 do. of pork, 872,270 kegs of lard, 600,320 pigs of lead, and 204,281 sacks of corn, were exported, besides bacon, beef, whisky, coffee, &c. In 1844-5 the export of cotton was 984,625 bales, of which 585,888 were sent to Great Britain, the export to Liverpool being 529,675 bales. A large quantity of the tobacco is first imported from Havana, and the coffee imported in 1844 amounted in value to 1,773,139 dollars. In 1844, 911 ships, aggregate burden 294,309 tons, of which about 1-6th were British, entered the port, with cargoes to the total value of 1,718,479, and 1,137 do., burden 372,502 tons, cleared out with cargoes valued at 7,023,253. Reg. shipping (1840) 126,612 tons. Capital estimated to be employed in manufs. 1,774,220 dollars. New Orleans is connected by a railway with Lake Borgne, an inlet of the Gulf of Mexico 10 m. distant; with Lake Pouchartrain 5 m. distant by railway and canal, and with Carrollton by a railway. It communicates by steamers with New York, and most of the large trading cities in the

W. Indies. The city and suburbs form 3 municipalities. It was founded by the French in 1717, and purchased, with Louisiana, by the U. States in 1803. In 1815 a British force, under General Pakenham, was obliged to retreat from before it by the troops under General Jackson.

NEW SOUTH SHETLAND, an archip. and portion of mainland, in the Pacific Ocean, lat. 61° to 64° 30' S., lon. 53° W., & 600 m. S. Tierra del Fuego, and the coast line of which has been explored beyond the Antarctic circle. Principal isls., Livingston, Cornwallis, King George, Clarence, and Elephant isls. This region was discovered by Gheritz in 1598, and afterwards further explored by Cook & Weddell, and its S. part by Biscoe in 1832, and Captain Sir J. Ross in 1842.

NEW SIBERIA, a group of isls., Arctic Ocean, off the N. coast of Siberia, gov. Yakutsk, in which they are comprised, between lat. 73° 12' & 76° 20' N., and lon. 135° 20' and 150° 20' E., and consisting of Kotelnoi, Fadievski, New Siberia, Liakhov and some smaller isls. New Siberia, the most E. of these isls., is 75 m. in length by 30 m. in breadth, and presents some curious vegetable and animal fossil remains. It was discovered by Hedenstrom in 1809.

NEW SOUTH WALES, a colonial territory belonging to Great Britain, in its widest sense comprising all the E. part of the Australian continent, S. of lat. 26° S., and E. of lon. 141° E., thus including the divisions of Cooksland (Moreton Bay), and Phillipsland, or Victoria; but in a more restricted sense it is limited to the country bordering E.ward on the Pacific ocean, between lat. 30° and 37° 3' S. (Cape Howe), and extending W.ward from lon. 153° E. to the boundary of the colony of S. Australia. Estimated area of its settled portions about 53,100 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 162,351; but according to a later census, including Port Phillip, Cooksland, and the squatting districts, 196,704, viz. 82,847 adult males, 42,287 adult females, and 71,570 children; of the same total number, nearly 100,000 belonged to the Church of England, 60,000 to the Roman Catholic church, and the remainder were chiefly of the Scottish church or Wesleyans. The Blue Mountains, which traverse the colony from N. to S. at from 30 to 50 m. from the ocean, have an average elevation of from 3,000 to 4,000 feet, & separate the undulating maritime counties Gloucester, Northumberland, Cumberland, Camden, and St Vincent, from the region watered by the Lachlan, Murrumbidgee, and Macquarrie, in the valley of which, and on the numerous small streams that flow into it, the recently discovered gold deposits are found. Principal rivers flowing E.ward, are the Hunter, Hawkesbury with its affluents, the Nepean, Clwyd, Macdonald, the Shoalhaven, Manning, Hastings, & MacLeay. Along the coast are several bays and good harbours: the principal of these are Ports Jackson, Hunter, Stephen, Macquarrie, Bateman, Jervis, and Botany Bay. Lakes are few & unimportant. Climate rather hot and dry, but equable. Mean ann. temp. of Port Jackson, 66°.8; winter, 55°.5; summer, 74°.2 Fahr. The air is pure and free from malaria and noxious vapours, and on the whole, very salubrious; but the country suffers frequently from drought, and it is more adapted for pasturage than tillage. Including Port Phillip, &c., about 6 millions acres of land have been appropriated as private property; & at the end of 1846, 182,133 acres were officially reported as under cultivation. Wheat, maize, barley, oats, hay, and potatoes, are the principal crops; some tobacco is raised, especially in the N., and the climate and soil are well suited for the vine culture, to which in the same year, 827 acres were appropriated, yielding nearly 55,000 gallons of wine, and about 1,400 ditto of brandy. In 1846, upwards of 1,400,000 bushels of wheat were raised, but this amount is insufficient for home supply, & corn is imported from more S. colonies, besides a large quantity of rice from India. Sheep farming is the principal branch of husbandry, and in 1846 there were reported to be nearly 8 millions of sheep in the colony, besides upwards of 1,400,000 head of horned cattle, and 88,000 horses. The land, chiefly in the outlying squatting districts, is let by the government in "runs" of several thousand acres each, at the rate of 2l. 10s. per annum, for an extent adapted for the support of each 1,000 sheep, or an equivalent number of cattle. The wool produced is of the best quality; and in 1846, 13,509,413 lbs., valued at 664,793l. were exported. Some coal is raised at Newcastle. The whale fisheries are somewhat important; but other fisheries and mines and manufs. are insignificant. Trade is chiefly with Great Britain, New Zealand, the Mauritius, and other British colonies. Total value of imports (1846) 1,630,552l., those from the United Kingdom amounting to 1,111,238l. Value of exports (1846) 1,481,539l., that of the products of the colony amounting to 1,201,433l. New South Wales proper, consists at present of 37 cos., 19 of which have been settled for many years, & 16 more, newly proclaimed in 1848. Principal towns, Sydney, the cap., Parramatta and Windsor (in co. Cumberland), Maitland Newcastle, Bathurst, and Goulburn; besides Melbourne & Geelong in Phillipsland, and Brisbane-town in Cooksland. Government vested in a governor appointed by the crown, an executive council of 4 mems., the chief functionaries in the colony; and a legislative council (at present) of 36 mems., 12 nominated by the governor, and 24 elected by the community, of whom 5 are sent from Phillipsland. The statute laws of England are in force. In each co. are courts of requests; and circuit and sessions courts are held at Goulburn, Paramatta, Bathurst, Maitland, and Sydney, which last town is the seat of the supreme court. The colony is subdivided into the dioceses of Newcastle, Sydney, and Melbourne. Public rev. (1847) 264,737l., and at the end of the same year a balance of 109,302l. remained in the colonial treasury. [AUSTRALIA, SYDNEY, VICTORIA.]

NEWSTEAD, a vill. of Scotl., co. Roxburgh, pa. and 1 m. E. Melrose, on the Tweed. Pop. 250. Near it are traces of a Roman camp, and remains of an ecclesiastical edifice of early date.

NEW YORK'S (ISLAND); N. Australia, is off the coast of Arnhem's Land, 60 m. N.E. Port Essington. —(Islands), S. Atlantic, are in lat. 54° 41' S., lon. 64° 28' W., and were so named by Cook. —(Range), Central Australia, is a mntn. tract, lat. 30° 21' N., lon. 146° 33½' E.

NEW YORK, one of the U. States of N. Amer., and though not the largest, yet in every other respect, the leading state of the Union; between lat 40° 30' and 45° N., and lon. 72° & 79° 55' W., having N.W. lakes Erie and Ontario, and the riv. St Lawrence, separating it from Upper Canada, and on other sides, the states Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Vermont, except at its S. extremity, where it touches the Atlantic Ocean, in which it includes Long Island. Area 45,650 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 3,090,022 Mean annual temp. of New York city 51°.6; summer, 70°.3; winter, 30°.1 Fahr. It is mostly an elevated region, with extensive indentations, watered by the Hudson, Mohawk, Oswego, Genesee and other rivers, including many affs. of the Susquehanna. The Alleghanies traverse its E. part in two parallel chains, and the Round-top, one of the Catskill mntns., is 3,804 feet in height. It contains Seneca, Cayuga, Oneida, Canandaigua, George, and many other lakes; lake Champlain forms a part of its N.E. frontier. Long Island, Staten isl., and Manhattan are also included in this state. Soil in the S. rather light but fitted for pasturage; it improves on proceeding N. ward, and the W. part is a highly fertile country. All the crops common in Britain are raised, with the addition of maize. The stock of sheep is estim. at upwards of 5 millions, or about 1-5th the total number in the Union; horses and cattle are more numerous than in any other state

In the W. & the S.E. are extensive forests, & their produce in timber, exclusive of other products, was estimated in 1840, at 3,900,000 dollars in value. Iron is abundant; and the salt springs at Onondaga & elsewhere, yielded in 1840, 2,868,000 bushels of salt; the capital invested in salt works, being estimated at 5,601,000 dollars, or 5-6ths of the total amount employed on the production of salt in the Union. Manufs. are in great variety, and the foreign commerce is greater than that of any other state. Total value of exports (1848) 32,861,540 dollars; ditto of exports 65,079,516 dollars, the latter comprising more than 3-5ths of the total exports of the Union. Total length of the canals in operation 798 m.; the principal are the Erie, Champlain, Cayuga, and Chenango canals, connecting the Atlantic rivers with the Canadian lakes, and the first of which, 364 m. in length, is the most extensive work of its kind in America or Europe. Total length of railways completed (1850) 840 m., expense 27 million dollars. Public rev. (1848) 848,155 dollars; annual educational grant 436,233 dollars. This state is divided into 38 cos., and sends 2 senators and 84 representatives to congress. Principal cities, Albany, the cap., New York, Brooklyn, Hudson, Buffalo, Oswego, and Ogdensburg, with Schenectady and numerous towns along the line of the Erie canal. The first settlement was made by the Dutch on Manhattan isl. in 1614. In 1664 the English obtained possession of the country; in 1673, it was retaken by the Dutch, but soon after restored to the English. The present constitution was framed in 1821. Governor and senators elected biennially.

NEW YORK, the largest and most populous city, principal seaport, and commercial cap. of the U. S., on an isl. near the S. extremity of New York State, between the mouth of the Hudson river, & East river, which separates Long Island from the mainland; lat. of city-hall 40° 42' 7" N., lon. 74° 0' 7" W. Area of city, including co., & Manhattan or New York island (separated from Westchester co., by Harlem river, crossed by 3 bridges), with some adjacent islets, 14,000 ac. Pop. (1850) 515,304. The city, 9 m. in circumference, occupies a triangular area, the apex of which, is covered by old, narrow, and crooked streets, but by far the greater part of New York consists of regular and handsome thoroughfares, the princip. of which, Broadway, intersecting the city throughout, is nearly 4 m. in length, and bordered by shops or stores, rivalling those of London. Pearl, Cedar, Pine, Front, Water, and South streets between it and the E. river, are important marts of business, and Wall street is the seat of the chief monetary transactions. Greenwich, E. Broadway, Henry, Madison, Bleeker, and Bond Streets and the Bowery, between the Broadway and Hudson river, are elegant public streets. The battery, Washington square in front of the New York university, Union square with a handsome fountain, are among the chief open spaces; in the Park, an area of about 11 acres, is the city hall, a Grecian edifice of marble and freestone, 216 feet in length by 105 feet in breadth, and one of the finest buildings in the United States. The Merchant's Exchange in Wall Street, having a noble central dome, has been constructed at a cost of 1,800,000 dollars. Amongst the most conspicuous buildings are the custom house, on the site of the old city hall (where Washington was inaugurated president); the University; Columbia college; the hall of justice, American institute, and house of detention; Trinity church, a splendid Gothic structure; St.

Paul's church with an Ionic portico, and a steeple 224 feet in height; St. John's, St. Thomas's, the Dutch, French Protestant, & Baptist churches; St. Patrick's cathedral, the Society library; Gothic hall, and Aston house, a vast hotel containing 390 rooms. New York has about 170 churches, 30 banks, 6 theatres, 2 museums, and numerous large hotels, & storehouses. It is abundantly supplied with water from Croton water works, 38 m. distant, formed at a cost of 12 million dollars (2,700,000). Other public institutions are, the New York hospital, infirmary, deaf-dumb, and lunatic asylums, and "Long Isl. farms," a fund for provision of destitute children. Manufs. are in great variety, and the total capital employed in 1840, was estim. at 11,228,900 dollars. The harb. is 25 m. in circumference; it has 3 entrances, defended by several strong batteries, and ships of the largest size can come up to the city wharves. New York communicates by the Hudson & Erie canal with the W. States, Canada, and the whole region of the great N. Amer. lakes, of which countries it is the great entrepôt. In 1844, its exports amounted in value to 34,334,692 dollars (8,011,428), and imports to 75,092,286 dollars (17,521,300), or 2-3rds. of the whole imports into the U. States. Customs rev. in ditto 11,444,797 dollars (2,670,452). In the same year 2,180 ships, aggregate burden 590,661 tons entered, & 2,216 ditto, burden 606,918 tons left the port; of which latter 933, burden 68,279 tons were British, 88 Swedish, and 82 belonged to the Hanse towns, the rest being mostly U. States shipping. Reg. shipping of the port (1840) 414,817 tons. Regular lines of packets maintain communication between New York and all the principal ports of the U. S., others in the W. Indies, Mexico, & S. Amer., and Liverpool, Southampton, Antwerp & Havre in Europe. It is connected with Harlem by a railway 7 m. in length. The city is divided into 17 wards, and governed by a mayor and common council. It was the seat of the first American congress, in 1785.

NEW ZEALAND, a colonial possession of Great Britain, consisting of a chain of 3 islands, with smaller isles in the Pacific Ocean, between lat. 34° 12' and 47° 20' S, and lon. 166° and 178° 39' E., about 1,200 m. S.E. Australia. Pop. of colonists (1844) 11,948. Estimated pop. of Aborigines 110,000 (?). The two principal islands extend from N.E. to S.W. in an irregular elongated shape. Length of both 1,163 m., mean breadth 140 m. Area 95,000 sq. m., nearly the extent of Great Britain. New Ulster, or North Isl., is separated from New Munster, or Middle Island, by Cook Strait; and New Leinster, or Stewart Island, a small island 61 m. in length, and about the same in breadth, is separated from the S. extremity of New Munster by Foveaux Strait. The islands are of trap and volcanic formation, with shales and sandstone. Principal minerals, copper, manganese, & coal. Surface mountainous, a chain of high-peaked snow-clad mountains intersects Middle Island, from N.E. to S.W. There are several extinct, and some active volcanoes. Mount Egmont, an extinct cone, in W.S.W. peninsula of North Island, has an elevation of 8,840 feet. Tongararo, in centre of North Island, is an active volcano, elevation 6,200 ft. Soil on the table lands and valleys, and near the coasts, fertile, and surface well-wooded. Mountains generally bare of woods, but overgrown with ferns and grasses. Temp. ranges from 39° to 74°, mean of year 58°. 2 Fahr. Mean ann. rain 36 to 40 inches. Snow rarely falls, heavy rains, and high gales are frequent, but there is no rainy season. Prevailing winds S.E. and S.W.; N.E. winds bring rain. There are several inland lakes, and springs and rivers are abundant. Harbours are good and numerous. A flax plant (phormium tenax), an edible fern (pteris esculenta), the sweet potato, the kauri pine, and various timber trees, are the chief native vegetable products. Wheat, and other grains, and vegetables introduced by the colonists, are very productive, and grazing grounds afford pasture during all the year. The island affords no indigenous quadrupeds. Birds are numerous, and the bones of a gigantic bird (Dinornis) found in the alluvial soil, afford evidence that such an animal existed at no distant period. The natives are a tall, well-made, active, and intelligent race of the Malay family. When the island was visited by Captain Cook in 1769, they were ferocious cannibals, and cannibalism still lingers among them, although in other respects they are docile, inclined to adopt civilized habits, and are found very susceptible of religious instruction. New Zealand had for many years been the resort of whaling vessels, and was at first colonized in a desultory manner, until in 1840, when it was adopted as a British colony; and emigration, to a considerable extent, has since taken place under a regularly organized association. In 1844, an insurrection of the natives occurred, under their chief Heki, but since that period they have remained tranquil. The principal British settlements are Auckland, the cap., New Plymouth, Wanganui, Wellington (Port Nicholson), on W. coast of New Ulster, Nelson (Tasman's Bay), and Otago, on New Munster (which see). In 1840, 100 American whaling vessels visited the island. Principal articles of traffic, flour, wheat, potatoes, timber, and native flax. Government vested in a governor, colonial council, and six members. The colony is a bishop's see, & there were, in 1844, 35 missionary establishments on the islands. A severe shock of an earthquake occurred at Wellington in 1848.

NEXÖE, a seaport town of Denmark, stift Zealand, on the E. coast of the island Bornholm. Pop. 1,400.

NEXON, a market town of France, dep. Haute Vienne, 10 m. S. Limoges. Pop. of comm. 2,160.

NEYVA, or NEIVA, a town of S. Amer., New Granada, dep. Cundinamarca, cap. prov., on the Magdalena, at the influx of the Neyva river, 132 m. S.W. Bogota. Its chief trade is in cacao, the Indians also resort to it for knives, mirrors, and trinkets. It suffered severely from an earthquake in 1827.—II. a town of Hayti, cap. arrond., 70 m. E. Port-Republicain, in a plain watered by the river Neyva, which enters Neyva bay on the S. coast, after a course of 75 m. A small river of Portugal has this name.

NGAN-HOËI, or GAN-HWAY, an inland prov., China, betw. lat. 29° & 34° N., & lon. 113° & 119° E., enclosed by Kiang-su, Che-kiang, Kiang-si, Houpe, and Hou-nan. Pop. (1812) 34,168,059. Surface mostly plain, and traversed by the rivs. Yang-tze-kiang, and the Hoai-ho, with its affs. Products comprise the precious metals, copper, salt, green tea from the S. dists., to from 6 to 7 million taels annually, ink 2 million taels, the best varnish, and much raw and wrought produce. Chief city Ngan-khing, 160 m. S.S.W. Nanking.

NHA-TRANG, or YATRANG, a seaport town of Anam, cap. prov., with a good harbour at a river's mouth, in lat. 12° 19' N., lon. 109° 20' E.

NHO, or NOUH, a town of British India, presid., dist. and W.N.W. Agra. It has a manuf. of salt from springs in its vicinity.

NIAGARA, a river of N. Amer., between Upper Canada and the U. S. (New York state), unites lakes Erie and Ontario, the river having a N. course of 35 m. from the former to the latter, and a total descent in that distance of 334 feet. It encloses numerous islands, the largest, Grand Island, having an area of 17,000 acres, and 15 m. from Lake Erie it forms the famous FALLS OF NIAGARA, where the river is precipitated over a vast ledge of silurian limestone, forming two cataracts, separated by Goat Island, 500 feet in width. The Horse-shoe fall, on the Canadian side, is 1,800 feet across, and 158 feet in perpendicular depth, and the American Falls 600 feet in breadth, 163 feet in depth, and above which a strong rude bridge crosses to Goat Island. The banks rise to 180 feet in perpendicular elevation, and are sprinkled with hotels and villas, and on both sides of the Falls, for some distance below, the stream forms a rapid, enclosed within a bed only 160 yards across. It has been estimated that the Falls discharge 100 millions of tons of water per hour. A cable suspension bridge 800 feet span, and at an elevation of 230 feet, has been erected on the riv., a little above the commencement of the cataract.—II. (formerly Newark), a town, Upp. Canada, cap. dist., on the W. side of the Niagara river, at its mouth in Lake Ontario. It is well built, & has a brisk traffic by steam with New York, Toronto, and Kingston. Races are annually held in its vicinity.—III. a township on the E. side of the river, U. S., New York, containing Goat Island, and a portion of the Falls. Pop. 1,277.—Niagara Falls is a contiguous vill., with some churches, several hotels, and manufs. of woollen cloth, steam engines, and paper, with corn and saw mills. Pop. 750. The Buffalo and Lockport railways meet here.

NIAS, or PULO-NIAS, an island of the Asiatic Archipelago, and one of the largest skirting the W. coast of Sumatra. Length 70 m., average breadth 16 m. Soil fertile, and it produces large quantities of rice. On its E. coast is a vill. or town of same name.

NIJAZPETROVSK, a mkt. town of Russia, gov. Perm, on the Ufa, 80 m. E.S.E. Krasno-Ufinsk, with extensive iron works.

NIBBIANO, a vill. of N. Italy, duchy and 8 m. S. Piacenza. Pop. 720.—II. a vill. of Lombardy, deleg. and 10 m. E.S.E. Como.

NIBE, a town of Denmark, prov. Jutland, stift amt., and 12 m. W.S.W. Aalborg, on the Liimfjord. Pop. 1,200.

NINLEY (NORTH), a pa. of England., co. and 16 m. S.S.W. Gloucester. Area 3,410 ac. Pop. 1,305, partly employed in woollen manufs.

NICÆA (vulg. Nice), a city, Asia Minor. [ISNİK.]

NICANDRO (STR), two towns of Naples.—I. prov. Capitanata, cap. cant., in the peninsula of Gargano, 10 m. E. Lesina. Pop. 7,800.—II. prov. and 10 m. S.W. Bari. Pop. 2,900.

NICARAGUA (STATE OF), a state of the Central American Confed., mostly between lat. 10° & 45° N., and lon. 83° 40' & 87° 35' W., having W. the state Guatemala, N. & E. the Mosquito territory, E. and S.E. the Caribbean Sea and Costa Rica, and elsewhere the Pacific O. Estim. area 39,380 sq. m. Pop. 350,000. It comprises one of the largest plains in the Confed., with the lake, whence it is named; also, the volcanic mntns. Guanacaure, Viejo, and Masaya. The river San Juan is partly in this state. Soil mostly of high fertility; the cotton raised is stated to be superior to that of Brazil, though little exported, except to the adjacent state of Costa Rica. Sugar of the best quality, and indigo, are principal products.

In 1835, the exports amounted in value to 749,000 dollars, consisting of bullion to 600,000 dolls.; with indigo, sarsaparilla, cotton, sugar, cattle, and mahogany. More recently, about 500 or 600 tons of Brazil wood, and 30,000 hides ann., with some indigo, were the principal exports. Imports of British and N. American manufs. are estim. in value at 100,000 dollars ann., the British imports forming 2-3ds of the whole. Some silks, gloves, and wines, are received from France; linens and glass wares from Germany; the other imports are chiefly from Peru, Chile, &c. Chief cities, Leon, the cap., Grenada and Nicaragua. Principal port, Realejo. Owing to perpetual revolutions, this has become the most wretched and impoverished state of Cent. Amer., and in 1846, its annual public rev. was estimated at only 50,000 dollars.—Nicaragua, a town in the above state, on the W. shore of L. Nicaragua, 38 m. S.E. Granada. Pop. upwards of 8,000, but the commerce of the lake is mostly absorbed by Granada.—San Juan de Nicaragua is a seaport town on the Caribbean Sea, Mosquito. [SAN JUAN.]

NICARAGUA LAKE, Central America, lies mostly between lat. 11° and 12° 12' N., and lon. 84° & 86° W., about 12 m. from the Pacific O., and 90 m. from the Caribbean Sea, into which latter it discharges its surplus waters by the river San Juan. Length, N.W. to S.E., 140 m.; average breadth 40 m. It is adapted for ships of the largest burden, being 15 fathoms in depth, and it contains the isls. Omotape, Madeira, Salentalamo, and some others. Its surface is about 134 feet (according to another, and official report, 128 ft.) above the level of the Pacific; but the surrounding country is only undulating, nowhere rising to more than 487 ft. in additional elevation, and the San Juan is generally navigable; from which, and other reasons, it has long been projected to establish through it a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and which would obviate the dangerous passage for shipping around Cape Horn. At its W. end this lake is connected by a small riv. with the L. of Leon (or Granada), from which also the cutting a canal, or a railway, to the Pacific, has been contemplated. [PANAMA.]

NICARIA, Icaria, an isl. of the Grecian Archipelago, belonging to Turkey, 12 m. W. Samos. Lat. 37° 35' N., lon. 26° 10' E. Area 50 sq. m. Pop. 1,000. Surface mountainous. Principal product, timber. It has only a few vills., and no object of much interest. It is famous in mythology for the death near it of Icarus, after his reputed aerial flight (whence its name).

NICASTRO, a town of Naples, prov. Calab.-Ult., cap. dist., on the W. side of the Apennines, 24 m. S. Cosenza. Pop. 10,000. It is straggling and mean, but enclosed by walls, outside of which are many olive grounds and orchards. In its castle, Henry, the son of the Emperor Fred. II. was confined. It is an archbishop's see. Near it are some mineral baths. It suffered greatly by the earthquake of 1638.

NICE (Ital. Nizza, anc. Nicæa), a seaport and episcopal city of N. Italy, cap. div., 98 m. S.W. Turin, with an excellent port on the Mediterranean, 4 m. E. of the French frontier. Pop. (including garrison, 1839), 33,811. It is situated in a plain, immediately W. & N. an old castle on a height, surrounded by bastioned walls, close & ill built, but its suburbs are handsome. Chief edifices, a palace, cathedral, convents, & hospitals; a theatre, bath establishments, an English chapel, and a triumphal arch. The port on the E., beyond Monte Albano, is protected by a mole. The beauty of its situation, and the salubrity of its climate attract a great number of strangers. It has manufs. of wine, oil, silk, and perfumery, and is a free port. Nice has been often taken by the French, and was, under the Empire, cap. dep. of the Maritime Alps. It is the birth-place of the painter Vanloo, and the astronomer Cassini. Marshal Massena was born in its vicinity. [NIZZA, and ISNIK.]

NICHOLAS (St), one of the Cape Verd islands, Atlantic O., between Sant Lucia and Santiago. Lat. 16° 35' N., lon. 24° 15' W. Length 30 m., breadth 13 m. Surface mntous. It has a harb. on its S. side, near which is a small town, the residence of a governor and a Portuguese bishop. —II. an island of England, in Plymouth Sound. [DRAKE'S ISLAND.]

NICHOLAS (St), several pas. of Engl. &c.—I. co. Devon, 5½ m. E.S.E. Newton-Abbot. Area 580 ac. Pop. 1,175.—II. Isle of Wight, adjoining Newport. Area 410 ac. Pop. 275.—III. co. Suffolk, 5½ m. N.W. Halesworth. Area 450 ac. Pop. 90.—IV. co. Kent, 6 m. W.S.W. Margate. Area 3,390 ac. Pop. 679.—V. S. Wales, co. Glamorgan, 5 m. W.S.W. Cardiff. Pop. 425.—VI. S. Wales, co. Pembroke, 4½ m. S.W. Fishguard. Pop. 346. Others in London, Bristol, Exeter, &c.

NICHOLAS (St), a harb. on the N.W. side of the isl. Zea, Grecian Archipelago.—(Chanel), N. side of Cuba, 60 m. in length, by 33 m. in breadth.—(Harbour), Lower Canada, on the N. side of the St Lawrence estuary, lat. 49° 18' N., lon. 67° 40' W.—(Point), the N.W. extremity of the isl. Java, on the Str. of Sunda, lat. 5° 52' S., lon. 106° 2' E.

NICHOLASTON, a pa. of S. Wales, co. Glamorgan, 1½ m. E.N.E. Penrice. Pop. 119.

NICKOLAI, a town of Prussian Silesia, reg. and 58 m. S.E. Oppeln. Pop. 3,320.

NICOBAR ISLANDS, called by the Malays, Pulo Sambilar (9 islands), a group of isls. in the Indian Ocean, S. of the Bay of Bengal, between lat. 6° 40' and 9° 30' N., and lon. 92° 50' and 94° E. They constitute, with the Andamans, the extension of the great volcanic band of Sumatra and Java. In the S. group, Great Nicobar has an area of 1,258 sq. m., and Little Nicobar 86 sq. m. Camorta, Chowry, & the other isls. of the N. group, are all smaller. They are all covered with trees & very fertile, yielding in abundance cocoa nuts, oranges, sugar, tobacco, and bamboos. Animals comprise scorpions, crocodiles, serpents, rats, pigs, dogs, and cats. Mean ann. temp. 70° Fahr. The islands are exposed to frequent hurricanes; the rainy season lasts 9 months, and the unusual phenomenon of frequent rain in the dry season (Dec. to Feb.), renders them most unhealthy. Repeated attempts at colonization have failed, on account of the prevalence of yellow fever. [ANDAMAN, DENMARK.]

NICOLA (San), 4 vills. of Naples.—I. Calab.-Ult. II., dist. Monteleone. Pop. 1,500.—II. Calab.-Ult. II., dist. Cotrone. Pop. 1,800.—III. Princip.-Ult., dist. Ariano. Pop. 1,300.—IV. NIGER, a celebrated river of Western Africa, considered identical with the Joliba or Quorra, rises in the Kong mountains, near lat. 9° 25' N., lon. 9° 45' W., 1,600 feet above the level of the sea. It flows N.E., and has a general bend E. & S. through Soudan and Guinea, to the bight of Benin (G. of Guinea), which it enters by a delta, between lat. 4° and 6° N., and lon. 5° and 7° E., after a course loosely estimated at 2,500 m. Almost the whole of its course has been traced by Park and Lander, and 100 m. from its supposed source it has been found navigable for large canoes; in its lower part it is in some places impeded by shoals, though varying from 1 to 5 m. in width, and often deep enough for moderate-sized vessels. Principal mouths, the New Calahar, Bonny, Nun, Forcados, & Benin rivs. Chief tributaries, the Sackatoo and Chadda rivers. The scenery near the delta of the Niger is of the wildest forest character. The only entrance yet discovered is narrow and very difficult. All attempts to ascend the river have failed, chiefly from the extreme insalubrity of the climate. The last expedition, under Captain Allen, in 1841, consisted of 3 steamers, fitted out by gov. at an expense of 65,000.

Lat. 56° 19' 43" N., lon. 44° 0' 58" E. Stationary pop. about 25,000, but at the time of its great fair, from 200,000 to 300,000 persons are here collected from all parts of Europe and Asia. It consists of an upper and a lower town, the former, or citadel, on a height S. the Volga, is imposing in appearance, and has some good streets, 2 cathedrals, the government offices, several convents, public schools, and churches, with an obelisk 76 feet in height. The lower town extending, on flat ground, along the Volga, is chiefly built of wood, and communicates by a bridge of boats across the Oka, where are some vast iron and stone bazaars, erected by the emperor Alexander, divided into various sections for separate goods, and surrounded by the rivers and a canal. Here is held the largest fair in the world, for 8 weeks from the 1st of July annually (removed to N. Novgorod from Macariev, on the Volga, in 1817), and at which, in 1839, the goods sold were estimated to amount in value to 160,597,000 rubles, or nearly 6½ million pounds sterling (Schnitzler, &c.). NIKULINO, some small places in Russia, gov. Iver, E. Staritza; and Russian Poland, gov. Moghilev, N.E. Bahinovitshi.

NILE, Nilus, a great river of E. Africa, formed by the union of the Bahr-el-Abiad (White river), and the Bahr el Azek (Blue river). The first, which is regarded as the true Nile, is supposed to rise on the E. edge of the table-land of E. Africa, about lat. 2° S., lon. 34° E., but its source is unknown. Expeditions sent by the Pacha of Egypt in 1840-2, traced it to lat. 4° 42' N., in lon. 30° 58' E. Here the navigation was interrupted by a ledge of rock; it flows generally N., with a width of from 1 m. to 2 m., and joins the Bahrel-Azrek at Khartum in Nubia (lat.  $15^{\circ} 37' N.$ ). The second rises in Abyssinia in lat.  $10^{\circ} 59' 25'' N.$ , lon.  $36^{\circ} 55' 39'' E.$  It flows N. 55 m., when it enters lake Dembeah on the S.W.; emerging from the lake on the S.E. it flows in the form of a curve first S., then W. and N.W., traversing in its course several mountain chains, and descending by numerous falls into the plains of Nubia, where it passes Sennaar. Its confluence with the Bahr el Abiad forms the Nile, which from this point flows N.E., N. & N.W., past Halfay, Shendy, and Berber, to lat.  $19^{\circ} 20'$ , where it turns to the S.W., forming a wide curve called the great bend. In lat.  $18^{\circ}$  it again turns N.ward and continues in a northerly direction past Dongola, Girgeh, Siout, and Cairo, to its mouth, near Assouan, and from the junction of its head streams to its delta, its basin is formed by two parallel chains of mntns., which in some places close upon it and form rapids, and in others open up and leave fine plains between them and the river. It forms the 1st cataract (in ascending) near Es-souan, lat.  $24^{\circ} 10' N.$ ; the 2d being in lat.  $21^{\circ} 52' 20'' N.$ , and the 3rd in lat.  $19^{\circ} 40' N.$  Its banks are generally elevated in Nubia, they are less so in Middle Egypt, and absolutely flat in the Delta. From Es-souan to the sea, the average fall is 2 inches to a mile, and its mean velocity is about 3 m. an hour. Its length from supposed source, following its bends to the sea, is about 3,000 m. (direct distance 2,300 m.). The delta of the Nile commences at lat.  $30^{\circ} 7' N.$ , where its waters spread out into numerous streams in the form of a triangle, extending at its base on the Mediterranean, over a space of 120 m., the two principal mouths are the W. or Rosetta branch, & the E. or Damietta branch. The others are the Bourlos and Dibe mouths. The system of the Nile is an anomaly among rivers; in ascending its course no affl. is met with for 1,400 m., the first being the Athara in Nubia, which joins it on the right, 27 m. S. Berber. It is the only great tropical riv., which by its periodical inundations, fertilizes a country surrounded throughout a great part of its course, by sandy deserts. The waters begin to rise in June, and they subside in September. [EOVPT.] From time immemorial the Egyptians have made use of canals for the purpose of extending the inundations. The rise of the Nile appears due to the periodical rains which fall in the tropical regions of Africa from June to September. In Upper Egypt the swelling of the riv. amounts to about 30 feet, and at Cairo to 24 feet, perpendicular.

Pop. 250,278. Surface in the W. occupied by the Cheviot mntns. and by wild moorlands, spurs of which stretch E.ward through the co., but are separated by fine valleys, which on the E. coast expand into broad level tracts. Coast line in parts very bold and rugged; in other parts indented by noble estuaries. Chief rivers, the Tyne, Coquet, Alne, Blyth, Wansbreck, and Till. Climate variable, mountainous parts chilly and wet. Soil among the Cheviots a gravelly loam, producing the finest short pasture; among the other mntns. a black peat, often swampy; and in the centre and E., moist loams or clay. Agriculture fully on a par with the best farming cos. Wheat, oats, beans, barley and turnips all yield the finest crops. Cattle, mostly short-horned, are bred and fed with acknowledged skill. The native Cheviot sheep possesses a deserved celebrity. Estates and farms mostly large. Sheep farms very extensive. Leases of from 7 to 21 years common. Farmsteads and cottages good. Average rent of land (1810) 15s. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. an ac.; but this average has greatly risen. Annual value of land (1842) 835,856 $\frac{1}{2}$ . The principal mineral is coal, for the export of which, this co. is pre-eminently noted. In 1843, 2,534,687 tons were shipped from Newcastle, mostly for the snpply of London. The pitmen are a well-paid, & greatly improved class. Lead and iron are also wrought. Annual value of mines (1842) 130,148 $\frac{1}{2}$ . Total value of assessed property 11,542,433 $\frac{1}{2}$ . Manufs. chiefly confined to Newcastle. The Newcastle and Carlisle, Great N. of England, Newcastle and Berwick, and Caledonian railways traverse this county, and many small railways connect the coal pits with the rivers. County revenue (1843) 11,324 $\frac{1}{2}$ . Northumberland is divided into 6 wards, and 97 pas. in the diocese of Durham, and N. circuit. Principal towns, Newcastle, Tynemouth, North Shields, Alnwick, Hexham, and Morpeth. The N. and S. divisions of the co. each send 2 mems. to H. of C., and its boroughs (exclusive of Berwick) send 4 mems. Reg. co. electors (1848) for N. div. 3,030, for S. div. 5,260. Under the Britons Northumberland formed part of the confederacy of the Brigantes: under the Heptarchy it formed a part of the kingdom of Northumbria. After the conquest, it was granted to the illustrious family of Percy, to a descendant of whom, through a female branch, it still gives title of Duke.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a maritime co. of New S. Wales, E. Australia, having N. the Hunter river, which separates it from the co. Durham, W. the co. Hunter, S. the Hawkesbury river, separating it from co. Cumberland, and E. the Ocean. Area 2,342 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 13,335. Surface mntnous. Coal is a highly important product, and exported from Newcastle, on the Hunter; besides which town, this co. contains Maitland, Singleton, Morpeth, &c. It returns 2 mems. to the New S. Wales legislative assembly, one for the co., and one for its boroughs.

NORTHUMBERLAND, several cos., U. S., N. Amer.—I. in centre of Pennsylvania. Area 440 sq. m. Pop. 20,027.—II. in E. of Virginia. Area 240 sq. m. Pop. 7,924.—III. a tnsnp., New York, 15 m. N.N.E. Ballston Spa. Pop. 1,672.

NORTHUMBERLAND (CAPE), S. Australia, is in lat. 38° 3' 00" S., lon. 140° 37' E.—(Islands) are off the E. coast of Australia, lat. 21° 30' S., lon. 150° E.—(Inlet), British N. America, a bay

W. of Cumberland Island, and N. of Frobisher Strait, its entrance in lat. 65° N., lon. 65° W.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORY is the name applied to British Amer., W. of Canada, the great lakes, & Moose rivs.,—also to the Huron territ., U. Sta.

NORTH WHITEHALL, a tnsnip., U. S., N. Amer., Pennsylvania, 95 m. E. N. E. Harrisburg. P. 2,324.

NORTHWICH, a market town of Engl., co. and 17½ m. E. N. E. Chester, pa. Great Budworth, on the riv. Weaver and the Grand Trunk canal, 4 m. from the Hartford station of the London and N.W. railway. Pop. 1,368. It has a large ancient church, grotesquely decorated, a grammar school, a union workhouse, branch bank, large dock yards for building flats employed in carrying salt, with very extensive manufs. and exports of that article obtained from contiguous mines, and very productive brine springs. The export was estimated in 1840 at 230,000 tons, and the trade is increasing.

NORTHWOLD, a pa. of Engl., co. Norfolk, 4 m. E. S. E. Stoke-Ferry. Area 5,200 ac. Pop. 1,140.

NORTHWOOD, a pa. of the Isle of Wight, 1½ m. W. S. W. West-Cowes. Area 4,270 ac. Pop. 5,147.

NORTHWOOD, a tnsnip., U. S., N. Amer., New Hampshire, 20 m. E. Concord. Pop. 1,172.

NORTH YARMOUTH, a tnsnip., U. S., N. Amer., Maine, on Casco Bay, 12 m. N. N. E. Portland. Pop. 2,284, empl. in fisheries and coasting trade.

NORTON, numerous pas., &c., of Engl. & Wales.

NORTON-CHIPPING, a pa., bur., and mkt. town of Engl., co. and 20 m. N. N. W. Oxford. Area 4,780 ac. Pop. 3,031. The town consists of one large street, with a fine Gothic church, free grammar school, and almshouse. Three m. W. are some curious Druidical remains.

NORTON-TALGATE, an extra parochial dist. of England, co. Middlesex, 1½ m. N. E. St Paul's, London.

NORTON, two townships of the U. S., N. Amer., Massachusetts, 33 m. S. Boston. Pop. 1,545.—II. Ohio, Summit co., on Ohio canal. Pop. 1,479.

NORTON SOUND, a large inlet of Behring Sea, Russian America, between lat. 62° and 65° N., and lon. 161° and 167° W. Length and breadth at entrance 200 m. each. It was discovered by Captain Cook in 1778.

NORWALK, a township of the U. S., N. Amer., Connecticut, on Long Island Sound, 60 m. S. W. Hartford. Pop. 3,863. The vill. is the landing-place of the steam boats from New York, and has manufs. of hats and carpets.—II. a tnsnip., Ohio, cap. co. Huron, 89 m. N. E. Columbus. P. 2,613.

NORUNGA and NORUNGABAD, two towns of British India; the former, presid. Bengal, prov. and dist. Bahar, 80 m. S. S. W. Patna; the latter Upper provs., dist. and 5 m. S. E. Mathura.

NORWAY (KINGDOM OF), (Swed. Norrige, German Norwegen), a country of N. Europe, united to the crown of Sweden, and forming the N. W. part of the Scandinavian peninsula, cap. Christiania. It extends from Cape Lindesnaes lat. 57° 57' 8", to the North Cape lat. 71° 10' 3" N., and between lon. 4° 50' and 31° 15' E., bounded E. by Sweden and Russian Lapland, W. by the German Ocean, N. by the Arctic Ocean, and S. by the Skager-rack. Length 1,150 m.; breadth 7 to 260 m. Area and pop. as follows:—

The great peninsula of Norway and Sweden, is a continuous mountain mass traversed by valleys. These mtns., the Scandinavian Alps, cover more than half the surface of Norway, and extend from N. to S., under the names of the Kiölen Dovre-Field or Dofrines, Land-Field and Hardanger-Field. The W. and N. parts of the peninsula form a continuous plateau, descending abruptly towards the W.; while, on the other side, the mntns. slope gently to the S.E. The measured points are Skageslöestinden, the highest known part of the Hurrungen, on the limits of the Sogne and Gulbrandsdal, 8,070 ft.; Snaehatten in the Dovre-Field, 7,549 ft.; Lodals Kaaben, in the Sogne-Field, 6,573 ft.; Gausta-Field, in Tellemarken, 6,162 ft.; Sulitelma, culminating point of the Kiölen, between Nordland and Swedish Lapland, 5,956 ft.; Folgefonden glacier, on the border of the stift Bergen, 5,135 ft. Nearly half the surface is under 2,050 ft. absolute height. The only plains are those formed by the table-lands between the stifts Aggershuus and Bergen, which extend from 60 to 80 m. in length, and have an elev. of 3,600 to 4,620 ft. The isolated mntn. peaks on these table lands rise far above the snow line. The mntns. of Norway contain rich minerals; but, from the difficulty of transport and the want of fuel, mining industry is but little developed. The only mines in operation are those of silver, copper, iron, cobalt, and chrome. The chief product is iron, the mines of which are situated mostly in the Gulf of Christiania; the silver mine of Konsberg is, at present, one of the richest in Europe, & next to the copper mine of Roraas, the most important in the kingdom. The principal valleys are confined to the E. side of the peninsula; the longest is the Osterdal, watered by the Glommen, which with its continuation, the Solö and Ondal, is 215 m. in length. The next in extent and the most fertile, is the Gulbrandsdal, watered by the Laugen. Narrow belts between the coasts & the commencement of the plateaux, are the only low lands in Norway; the most extensive of these surrounds the Gulf of Trondhjem. The W. shores are penetrated by an immense number of gulfs or fjords, which occasionally extend deep into the table-lands. The chief of these are—from S. to N., the Bukkefjord, Hardanger, Trondhjem, Saltens, Ofoden, Porsang & Varang fjords. The most extensive gulf on the S. coast is that of Christiania. Numerous peninsulas separate the fjords; among the most remarkable of which are Cape Nord-Kyn on the N., and Cape Stadt on the W. coast. Some of the fjords form excellent harbours; but the immense number of mountainous isls., and rocky islets which border the coast, render access difficult. The largest of these archipelagoes, are the Lofoden isls., separated from the continent by the Vest-fjord; and, further N., the isls. of Mageröe, Soröe, Ringvalsöe, Hvalöe, and Senjen. Between these island groups and the continent, there is a wide passage for coasting vessels. A great part of the E. side of Norway is covered with lakes, which, however, are generally of small extent, many of them are situated at great elevations in the table-land: among these the Bygdinsee, 15 to 20 m. long, is 3,490 feet above the sea. The lakes abound in fish. The river systems of Norway are of the utmost importance in the economy of the country; the smaller streams are employed in driving the machinery of mines, corn, and saw-mills, and in floating timber to the larger rivers; these serve also as the chief means of communication in winter, when they are covered with strong ice. The largest rivers are on the E. slope of the plateau, flowing to the Skager-rack: these are the Glommen, Longen, Fæmund, Laaven, Beina, the Namsen, and Tana. Ships enter the mouths of some of these rivers for 5 or 10 m., but none of them are navigable on account of numerous waterfalls (fos), which all of them form: of these the more celebrated are the Sarpfenos on the Glommen, near Fredrikstad, & the Rukaufos, in the dist. Tellemarken, which falls 513 ft. perpendicular. Vöringsfos, in the dist. Hardanger, has a perpendicular fall of 870 to 920 ft.

Scandinavia, from its vicinity to the sea, has a remarkably mild climate considering its northern position: the snow line is much higher than in corresponding latitudes in other countries: in lat. 61° it is 5,500 ft.; and in lat. 70° 3,500 ft. above the sea. In Siberia the cultivation of grain ceases at lat. 60°; while in Norway it extends to lat. 70° N. The mean annual temp. at the level of the sea is, at North Cape, 32°; Trondhjem (lat. 63° 5') 40°; Ullevsvang in Hardanger-Fjord (lat. 60°) 46°; Christiania (lat. 59° 54') 41° Fahr. The sea never freezes, even at North Cape, but the shallow water of the Skager-rack is occasionally frozen in winter; about 1-38th part of the surface is covered with perpetual snow, and vast glaciers descend from the S. plateau: the largest of these are the Folgefonden, in Hardanger, lat. 60°, which descends to 5,100 feet, and the Snaebræn N. of Sogne-Fjord. The year is nearly divided between winter and summer; spring is almost unknown, and the autumn is cold and rigorous; snow covers the ground from the beginning of November till the end of March. In January and February, the temp. is usually from 14° to 18°, and often as low as 2° Fahr. Summer lasts from May to September, during which the temp. is often as high as 108° Fahr. In the month of March the surface is strewn with ashes, earth, or sand, by which means the snow is melted, and from this process, combined with the great heat and the length of the day, 8 to 12 weeks are sometimes sufficient for sowing, ripening, and reaping, the crops in the interior. The climate of the W. coast, though milder than that of the S. or the interior, is deteriorated by excessive humidity; the W. wind blowing over the Atlantic, carries moisture, which is intercepted by the mountains, and precipitated in the form of rain, to the amount of 80 inches annually. While the E. wind brings extreme drought. The vegetation of Norway varies according to climate and position. Among trees, the pine tribe are the most numerous. The fir, which is found in lat. 60° 20', at an elevation of 4,000 feet; and the pine (pinus sylvestris), form vast and valuable forests in Aggerhuus, Christiansand, and Trondhjem. The forests of fir extend N. to the Polar circle, and those of pine beyond it. The oak forms fine forests in the amts Jarlsberg and Laurvig, and especially in Christiansand. The birch attains the highest northern latitude. Fruit trees are not indigenous in Norway, although the wild apple is common in the lower regions, and the cherry is widely distributed. Flowers are successfully cultivated in the gardens of the S. and W. The principal grain of Norway is barley; the other cerealia are cultivated only in favoured spots in the S. Barley attains the highest northern latitude, and the greatest elevation: in lat. 59° 25', it is grown at a height of 2,838 feet; the extreme limit of its culture is lat. 70°, but there it only ripens at an elevation of 65 to 100 feet; its profitable culture is confined to a narrow belt of coast land, and to the agricultural colonies of Molselv and Barodal, in Nordland. The corn raised is insufficient for home consumption. The potato has, of late, been extensively cultivated. The rearing of cattle is the chief occupation of the pop. of the mountainous districts, who, like the Swiss, leave the vills, and spend the summer with their flocks and herds in the upper valleys. From the simple habits of the pop., & the excellent climate, the value of life is understood to be higher in Norway than in any other country of Europe. The horses, a small, but hardy, breed, are extensively exported to Sweden, England, & Scotland. Sheep are of an inferior breed, and yield coarse wool. In the N., the reindeer is the only resource of the Laplander. The most destructive wild animals are the brown bear, wolf, and lynx; these, with the fox and others, are hunted for their skins. The eagle is so destructive to sheep and lambs, that a private company is established for its extirpation. Game of all kinds is abundant, and there are no game-laws. The chief objects of the chase are the deer, elk, reindeer, and hare; the seal, which abounds on all the coasts, the fish-otter; & among birds, the grouse, and the capercaillie. The coast literally swarms with sea-fowl: the wild goose and eider duck are numerous; the swan appears on the S. coast in winter, & ducks of various kinds abound on the coasts & in the lakes & rivers. In the small uninhabited isles off the N. coast, vast numbers of the eggs of sea fowl are procured. Fishing forms the most important branch of industry. Whales are occasionally taken on the coast of Finmark; salmon abound in the gulfs and rivers; there are extensive beds of oysters on all the coasts, and the pearl oyster is found in many of the rivers.

Manufactures, properly so called, scarcely exist in Norway. Brandy distilleries and saw-mills are the only extensive branches of industry; next to these are forges and metal foundries, the produce of which is exported in a raw state, except what is used in the manufacture of arms at Kongsberg, & in the manufs. of iron wire & nails. The manufs. of cloth, linen, and cotton, as well as the preparation of skins & leather, are almost entirely domestic. The other manufs. comprise those of glass, paper, oil, gunpowder, soap, tobacco, & sugar refining. Owing to the difficulty of transport, all the seats of industry, and the only towns, are on the coast, and chiefly on the Gulf of Christiania. Ship-building is actively carried on in the ports; in 1831, 88 ships were built, aggregate tonnage 2,355 lasts; and in 1838, 59 ships, 2,620 lasts. In the middle ages, the commerce of Norway consisted exclusively in the exportation of fish, and this is still the most important article of trade. Next to this is the export of timber, which was commenced by the Dutch in the 16th century; and, lastly, the products of the mines & metal forges. The timber exported annually amounts to 200,000 lasts, value 1,685,000 species dollars. The principal forests are in the interior: the timber is felled in autumn and winter, and is conveyed over the snow to the coast. Holland is now the chief market for Norwegian timber. Fish is exported from all the towns on the W. coast, but Bergen is the chief entrepôt. The most important branches of this trade are dried fish, & salted herrings. The export of mineral products is less than might be expected, from the number of mines: the principal are, iron, copper, and silver. The chief imports are salt, grain, and colonial produce. Commerce in the interior of the country is greatly impeded for want of means of communication; none of the rivers are navigable except near their mouths. Good roads exist only between the towns of the S. coast and the principal valleys in Nordland and Finmark; the usual communication is by sea. Among the numerous islands on the W. coast, there are violent and irregular currents, which render the coast navigation dangerous. Among these is the celebrated Mal-Ström, or Moskenæs-Strom, the danger from which has been greatly exaggerated, since it can, at nearly all times, be passed over even by open boats. Regular communications have successively been established between the principal towns of the coast from Christiania to Hammerfest, and steam vessels ply in the Gulf of Christiania, and on the Lakes of Mjösen and Tyrifjord. Norway has a National discount bank, established 1817, which has the exclusive right of issuing paper money.

Nearly the whole pop. of the kingdom are Northmans, or Normanns. The Laplanders, & Fins, people the entire of the N. portion of the country: those of the mtns., the most numerous, live on the products of their reindeer; and those of the coast, on fishing. The Norwegian, or Norsk, is one of the Teutonic, or German languages, & is nearly allied to the Swedish & Danish. The constitution of Eidsvold, modified by the Storting, or National Assembly, after its adhesion to the treaty of Kiel, is the fundamental law of the kingdom: its principal conditions are—that Norway is a free, independent, and indivisible state, only united under the same sovereign with Sweden. Lutheranism is the state religion, in which Lutherans are obliged to train their children. Other religionists are tolerated, except Jews and Jesuits, who are excluded. The government is a constitutional monarchy: the throne is hereditary in the male line; in case of failure of heirs, the king is elected by the representatives of Sweden and Norway. There are few countries in Europe where elementary instruction is more widely spread than in Norway; every peasant can read, and many can write and cast accounts: the law forbids the marriage of any one who cannot procure a certificate of confirmation, and this is only given to those who can read. Every individual of the age of 20 not confirmed, is liable to be sent to a house of correction to receive the necessary instruction. In all the towns there are elementary schools, and many have Sabbath and private schools. On its separation from Denmark, Norway had only four classical schools, since then nine have been added. Most of the towns have superior burgher schools. The chief seat of learning is the University of Christiania; there is a military school at Christiania, and a school of marine at Frederikshavn. Six normal schools are supported by the state. There are excellent public libraries, museums, and scientific collections in the different towns. The principal literary productions are periodicals. There are hospitals in all the principal towns and in the provinces. Each commune is bound to maintain its own poor, and mendicity is punished as a crime. The state maintains magazines of reserve for grain, which is supplied to the inhabitants on payment of a fixed amount of interest. In 1848 the army amounted to 23,484 men; and the navy, 2 frigates, 9 smaller vessels, and 8 steamers, having in all 132 guns, & 50,000 men. Public revenue (1848-51) estimated at 2,715,700 specie dollars. Since 1836 all direct taxes have been abolished; the public revenue is derived from customs, imports, & state property.

In 1814, Olaf IV., King of Denmark, and heir to the throne of Norway, united the crowns of the two kingdoms, and this union lasted till 1814, when Norway was ceded by the King of Denmark, and annexed to Sweden by the allied powers, at the treaty of Kiel, 14th January 1814. The cession was at first rejected by the Norwegians, but afterwards recognised, and the two crowns of Norway and Sweden, were declared united on the 4th November 1814.

NORWICH, a city, parl. bor., and river-port, of England, cap. co. Norfolk, and a co. of itself, on the Yare, or Wensum, here crossed by ten bridges, 18 m. W. Yarmouth, and 100 m. N.N.E. London, communicates by the N. and E. Counties railway. Area of city and co. 5,920 ac. Pop. 60,982. The city, about 5 m. in circ., is bordered on the N. and E. by the river; elsewhere it was formerly enclosed by walls, flanked with towers and entered by twelve gates, but these have been mostly removed. On the S. and W. several new quarters have sprung up, and most of the hamlets of its co., now form suburbs continuous with the city. Streets generally very irregular: the market place is spacious. Near the centre of the city is the castle, a massive quadrangular Norman keep, now used for a prison, and surrounded by the remains of three successive lines of walls; the inner enclosure, or "castle precinct," being laid out in public walks. On the castle-hill are the new co. jail; and the co. hall, an edifice in the Tudor style. The cathedral, built between the 11th and 16th centuries, and very handsome, is 411 feet in length, 191 feet in breadth, and surmounted by a spire 315 feet in height, or inferior only to that of Salisbury. Around it are the cloisters, bishop's palace, deanery, and St Ethelred and Erpingham gates, connecting the cathedral with the city. Norwich has more churches than any other English city, except the metropolis. St Peter Mancroft is spacious; St George, Colegate, St Lawrence, and St Saviour: several other churches have round towers, and belong apparently to the early Norman area. There are, besides, the Unitarian, an Independent, Baptist, Roman Catholic, two Friends' meeting houses, a synagogue, and many other dissenting places of worship. Many remains exist of old monastic edifices; and St Andrew's Hall, used for corporation and other festivities, and public meetings, was originally a part of a Dominican convent. The Guild-hall, containing a collection of portraits; the new city jail, the corn exchange, public library, theatre, cavalry barracks, and a large workhouse, are among the chief edifices. The great hospital charity, rev. about 7,000*l.* a year, supports many aged persons, and a grammar school. The boys' and girls' hospital, rev. about 4,000*l.*; Doughty's hospital, Norfolk and Norwich general hospital, blind asylum, Norfolk and Norwich literary institution, art-union, and a mechanics' institute, are among the most conspicuous public foundations. Norwich was long famous for its worsted manuf., established by Flemings, who settled in it in the time of Henry I., but this has declined in favour of the W. Riding of Yorkshire; and most of the yarns now wrought up at Norwich, are spun at Bradford, &c. Its principal manufs. are now bandanas, bombazines, shawls, gauzes, crape, silk fabrics of various kinds, mohair, fringe, sacking, and horse-hair, fabrics; and, in 1839, there were in the city and vicinity, upwards of 4,000 looms in use, besides silk, worsted, and woollen mills, and one cotton mill. Norwich has also iron and brass foundries; snuff, oil, mustard, and corn, mills; breweries and dyeing works. It has a branch of the Bank of England, and several private banks, and a large insurance company. It communicates by a canal with the Lowestoff navigation; and with Ely, Cambridge, and London, by the N. and E. Counties railway. Corp. rev. (1847-8) 13,533*l.* It returns two mems. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 4,220. It is the place of election for the E. div. of Norfolk. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Throughout the civil war it was garrisoned for the Parliament. Archbishop Parker, Dr Kay, Dr Samuel Clarke, and Beloe, the translator of Herodotus, were natives of Norwich. The city is the seat of a triennial musical festival.

NUBIA, a country of E. Africa, on the Red Sea, situated between lat. 11° and 24° N., and lon. 28° and 39° E.; bounded E. by the Red Sea, S. by Abyssinia, W. Darfur and the Great Desert, and N. by Egypt. Area estimated at 35,000 (?) sq. m., and pop. at 400,000 (?). It is divided into Lower Nubia, extending from the frontier of Egypt to Dongola (lat. 18° N.); & Upper Nubia from Dongola to Abyssinia. Nubia is situated almost entirely in the valley of the Nile, which is here so narrow as to leave no space for cultivation on its banks, and the productive districts occur in the gorges between the mountains, and on the islands. A desert of sand and rocks, with some small fertile oases, extends E. from Lower Nubia to the Red Sea. In Upper Nubia the country is more varied, the Nile here receives its afl. the Athara, or Tacazze, 165 m. below the junction of the white and blue rivers; between these rivers are situated the regions of Shendy, Halfay, and Sennaar, which contain vast fertile plains. The climate of Nubia is extremely hot and dry, but on the whole healthy; the plague is said never to have penetrated S. of the 2nd cataract (lat. 22° N.) Besides the animals common to Egypt, Nubia has the giraffe, and several species of antelopes and birds which belong to the central plateau of Africa. Agriculture employs most of the pop. on the banks of the Nile and its tributaries, and artificial irrigation is resorted to as in Egypt. Chief products dhourra, barley, cotton, indigo, tobacco, senna, coffee, & dates. Cattle, sheep, and goats are reared by the Arabs of the neighbouring deserts. Manufs. are limited to objects for domestic use. An extensive transit trade is carried on with the interior of Africa and Egypt, in slaves, gold-dust, senna, & ostrich feathers. Suakin on the Red Sea is the only port. The Nubians belong to Arabian and Ethiopian races; the pastoral tribes on the banks of the Tacazze and the Upper Nile speak the Arabic language. Previous to the conquest of Nubia by Ibrahim Pasha in 1821, it was governed by a multitude of independent chiefs; since then it has been under the dominion of Egypt.

OHIO, a large and important riv. of the U. S., N. Amer., formed by the junction of the Alleghany and Monongahela rivers, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; has thence a tortuous W.S.W. course of 1,033 m., separating the states Virginia and Kentucky on the E. and S., from Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois N. and W.; and joins the Mississippi at Cairo near lat. 37° N., lon. 89° W. At Pittsburg it is about 830 feet above the sea; its course thence for 300 m. is between two ridges of hills. Near Louisville it passes through a mountain break, and forms rapids in which it descends 23 feet in 2 m.; its course thenceforth is mostly through a level country, and its current is generally placid, being usually from 2 to 3 m. an hour. At Cincinnati it is 535 yards, and at its mouth about half a mile across; but between October and January annually, and occasionally in summer, it is so augmented by floods that vessels drawing 12 feet of water can then navigate it downwards from Pittsburg. In winter it is annually frozen in the upper part of its course, which causes a suspension of navigation for 8 or 10 weeks. Principal affs. the Big-Beaver, Muskingum, Scioto, Miami, and Wabash from the N., the Kenawha, Sandy river, Kentucky, Green river, Cumberland, and Tennessee from the S. Its basin is estimated to comprise 196,000 sq. m., and with its tributaries it presents at least 5,000 m. of navigation through some of the most fertile countries in the world. On its banks are the towns Beaver, Wheeling, Marietta, Point Pleasant, Gallipolis, Portsmouth, Cincinnati, Port William, Jefferson, and Louisville, where its falls are obviated by a canal navigable for steamers. Aggregate tonnage of its ports in 1838, amounting to 35,760 tons, almost wholly steam-boats.

OHIO, one of the U. S. of N. Amer., between lat. 38° 23' and 41° 50' N., and lon. 80° 30' and 84° 47' W., having E. Pennsylvania & Virginia, S. Kentucky, W. Indiana, N. Michigan and Lake Erie. Area about 40,000 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 1,977,031. Surface mostly level, and in parts swampy; but nearly 3-4ths are highly fertile, & 9-10ths supposed to be cultivable. Principal rivers the Ohio, & its affs. the Scioto, Miami, and Muskingum, and the Maumee, Sandusky, & Cuyahoga. Between the Scioto and Miami are some wide prairies; forests are extensive. Ohio is rapidly becoming a thickly settled country of moderate-sized freeholds, and as an agricultural and cattle rearing state, it ranks amongst the first in the Union. Wheat, maize, and barley are the chief crops; other products are, tobacco, hemp, flax, hay, potatoes, fruits, silk, and wine. Hogs are reared in large numbers, and Cincinnati is the largest pork market in the Union. Large droves of fat cattle are sent every autumn to the markets of the E. and S. The whole E. part of the State is one vast coal bed; other minerals are salt, lime, marble, and iron ore. Ohio takes the lead among the W. states for manufacturing industry. Cotton and woollen stuffs and yarn, iron, glass, and cabinet wares, paper, oils, and articles of clothing are made in all the principal towns. Ship and steam-boat building is important. The Ohio canal extends from Cleveland on Lake Erie to Portsmouth, & is, including branches, 334 m. in length; the total canals in the State have an aggregate length of 1,569 m., and were constructed at a cost of upwards of 15,926,000 dollars. In 1848, there were 321 m. of railway in the State. Public rev. (1848) 2,212,240 dollars. Principal towns, Columbus, the cap., Cincinnati, Cleveland, Chillicothe, Sandusky, Steubenville and Zanesville. The first settlement in this State was made in 1788. In 1802, the State formed its constitution, and was admitted into the Union. Governor and senate elected biennially. The State sends two representatives to Congress.—II. OXFORDSHIRE, a central co. of Engl., having E. the co. Bucks, N. Warwick & Northampton, W. Gloucestershire, and S. Berks, from which it is wholly separated by the Thames. Shape extremely irregular. Area 756 sq. m., or 483,840 ac., of which upwards of 400,000 are under cultivation. Inhab. houses 32,165. Pop. 161,643. Surface mostly level, or undulating, except in the S., where it is traversed by the Chiltern hills. Soil in the N. a fertile loam, elsewhere gravelly, or thin, and on a limestone subsoil. Princip. rivers, the Thame, Cherwell, Windrush, and Evenlode, affls. of the Thames. Parts of the co. are well wooded. Tillage farms prevail, but agriculture is not conspicuously advanced. Barley, wheat, and turnips, are the main crops. Dairy produce of excellent quality. Stock of sheep large, especially on the Chiltern range. Estates and farms mostly small; leases of 7 to 14 years common. Aver. rent of land (1810) 20s. 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. per ac. Assessed value of land (1842) 602,395 $\frac{1}{2}$ . Minerals of no importance. Manufs. of lace, gloves, & blankets at Witney, &c., exist on a small scale. The Oxford canal, 91 m. in length, traverses the co. from N. to S., connecting the Thames with the Coventry canal, and through it with the Mersey, Severn, and Trent, and a branch of the Great Western railway extends in the same direction. Total value of assessed property (1842) 1,025,420 $\frac{1}{2}$ . Co. rev. (1848) 12,419 $\frac{1}{2}$ . The co. is divided into 14 hunds., and 203 pas., mostly in diocese & circ. of Oxford. Principal towns, Oxford, Banbury, Woodstock, and Henley. The co. sends 3 mems. to H. of C., and 6 are sent by its bors. & univcr. Beg. co. elects. (1846) 5,384. The aboriginal inhabs. of this co., the Dobuni, are said to have welcomed their Roman conquerors, and always to have lived contentedly under them. Roman remains are numerous in the county.

OXFORD, a city, parl. bor., and the seat of one of the principal universities of England, cap. co. Oxford, betw. the junction of the Isis & Cherwell, here crossed by numerous bridges, 55 m. W.N.W. London, on the Great Western railway, & branch. Lat.  $51^{\circ} 45' 55''$  N., lon.  $1^{\circ} 15' 29''$  W. Area of parl. bor. 2,930 ac. Pop. 32,556. It stands in an undulating amphitheatre, surrounded by wooded meadows, and encompassed on the W., S., & E., by hills, but opens towards the N. into a champaign country, and presents a magnificent appearance, with its numerous spires and domes; that of the Radcliffe library being the most conspicuous. The High street, proceeding from E. to W., & entered by a handsome stone bridge over the Cherwell, is one of the noblest thoroughfares in Europe. In it are Magdalen, All Souls, Queen's, and University colleges, and the university church. At right angles with this street, is another line upwards of 1 m. in length. In this are Christchurch college and the townhall, and its N. part is very broad, and ornamented with rows of elms. Parallel to High street, is Broad street, in which are Balliol, Trinity, and Exeter colleges, the Ashmolean museum, Clarendon rooms, Seldonian theatre, & near it the academical schools, with the Bodleian library & Picture gallery. Several of the streets are lined with substantial private residences, and a new and handsome suburb has been built within the last 25 years. The cathedral of Oxford, attached to Christchurch college, and on the site of a priory founded in the 8th century, is an edifice of different styles, between the 12th & 16th centuries, with a spire 146 ft. in height. Its see comprises the co. Oxford, & the archdeaconries of Berks and Bucks. Revenue of bishopric (1847) 2,506 $\frac{1}{2}$ . St Mary's church, used for academical services, has a spire of 180 ft. in height, and is a fine structure, though disfigured by a heavy porch. Carfax, or St Martin's, is the corporation church. St Peter's in the East is the oldest existing church in Oxford (supposed about the 9th century); its older parts are Saxon, and it has a crypt of the same architecture. St Mary Magdalen is a handsome church in the decorated style. St John's, All Saints', and St Giles', also deserve notice. In the city are also 10 other benefices. Besides the colleges, several of which, as Christchurch, New College, All Souls, Magdalen, and Queen's, boast of imposing architecture, & rich internal ornament, other princip. buildings are the town and co. hall, music hall, city bridewell, sessions house, and co. jail, a Gothic embattled structure on the site of the anc. castle, the market houses, Radcliffe infirmary, house of industry for 11 pas., many almshouses, and chapels for Rom. Catholics, Methodists, Independents, and Baptists. Oxford has large diocesan & national schools, numerous charitable endowments, several banks, and it had formerly many flourishing hotels, and was a centre of a good deal of stage coach traffic. It is chiefly supported by its university, but it has some transit trade in coals and corn, facilitated by wharfs and quays on the Isis. It is governed, exclusive of the university, by a mayor, 9 aldermen, and 30 councillors, and is the seat of quarter and petty sessions, a mayor's court, and court of hustings, and of assizes and monthly courts for the co. Corp. rev. (1847) 5,704 $\frac{1}{2}$ . It sends 2 mems. to H. of C. for the town, reg. elects. (1847) 2,881; and 2 mems. for the university, reg. elects. 2,758. It is the place of election for mems. for the co. Mkts., Wednesday & Saturday. Fairs 4 times ann., & races arc held during August in Port-Meadow, W. of the city.—The UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD consists of 19 colleges, and 5 halls, as follow:—University college, reputed to have been founded in 872, revived in 1249; Baliol, founded between 1263 and 1268, and of which Wickliffe was once master; Merton, founded at Malden in Surrey, in 1264, and removed to Oxford in 1274; Exeter, founded 1314; Oriel, a handsome and richly ornamented edifice, dating from 1326; Queen's, founded in 1340, and the buildings of which are among the finest in the city; New college, 1386, with the most gorgeous and elegant chapel in the university; Lincoln, founded 1427; All Souls', 1437, with a noble hall, and a library of 40,000 vols.; Magdalen, 1466, at the entrance of the city from London, with much fine Gothic architecture, and a hall that has been the banquetting room of many English sovereigns; Brazen Nose, founded 1509; Corpus Christi, 1516; Christchurch, originally founded by Cardinal Wolsey in 1525, and with by far the most extensive buildings and grounds belonging to any of the colleges, a W. front, 382 ft. in length, a tower, containing the "Great Tom," a bell, weighing 17,000 lbs.; magnificent hall, picture gallery, library, &c.; Trinity, founded 1554; St John's, 1557, with handsome buildings in the N. part of the city; Jesus, founded 1571; Wadham, 1613; Pembroke, 1620; Worcester college, 1714; and St Mary's, New Inn, St Alban, Magdalen, and St Edmund's halls, which two last are unendowed academical houses. Total mems. (1848) 6,020. The university is governed by its own statutes, administered by a chancellor, a resident vice-chancellor, who is a magistrate for

Oxford, and the cos. of Oxford and Berks, two proctors, and some subordinate officers. The corporate business is conducted by the house of congregation, composed of the resident doctors, heads, and professors of colleges, and the house of convocation, comprising all those whose names remain on the books of the university, whether resident or not. Public professorships are of royal or private endowment; and in all there are 28 professors and readers, some of whom lecture in the "schools," new buildings for which have been lately constructed. The fellowships and scholarships are chiefly reserved for parties who, by birth or interest, rather than learning, acquire a title to them; but at Balliol, Oriel, Lincoln, and Wadham colleges, they have been thrown open to competition. Most of the colleges have exhibitions, with stipends from public bodies elsewhere, and at Christchurch is a body of servitors, similar to the sizars of Cambridge. The Bodleian library, connected with the university, comprises 220,000 vols., and 20,000 MSS., and is entitled to a copy of all new works published in the United Kingdom. There are besides about 23 other libraries. Total revs. of the university estimated at 457,490*l*. University college claims to have been founded by Alfred. It is certain that Oxford was a seat of learning as early as the time of Edward the Confessor. It was a principal residence of numerous Saxon, Danish, and Norman monarchs. In the civil war, the members of its university sided with the king, and they have generally, to the present day, espoused high church and tory principles. The university has sent 2 mems. to House of Commons since the time of Edward 1. Reg. electors (1847) 2,758.

Surface mtnous. in the centre, whence it slopes gradually to the coasts. It has no town of importance.—The Paragua river, dep. Orinoco, tributary to the Caroni, has a N. course of 220 m. On it is the town Barceloneta.

PARAGUAY, a large river of S. Amer., and one of the principal uniting to form the Plata; rises by numerous heads in the Brazilian prov. Matto-Grosso, near the sources of the Guapore, Tapajos, & Xingu, tributs. of the Amazon, and in lat. 13° S., lon. betw. 55° & 58° W. It thence flows mostly S., between the territories of Bolivia and the Plata Confed. on the W., and those of Brazil and Paraguay E.ward; and near Corrientes, lat. 27° 20' S., it unites with the Paraná, the name of which river it afterwards assumes. Total course 1,600 m., throughout nearly all which, from the sea upwards to the influx of the Jauru, it is navigable. It receives from the E. the rivers Porrudas and Taguari, from the W. the Sipotuba, Jauru, Galdan, Pilcomayo, & Vermejo; & betw. lat. 17° & 19° S., it traverses a wide region of swamps, which during the rains form a great inland sea.

PARAGUAY, an inland state of S. Amer., mostly between lat. 19° and 27° 35' S., and lon. 54° 10' and 58° 40' W., and nearly enclosed by the Paraguay and Parana rivers, separating it from the Plata Confed. and the Brazilian prov. San Paulo. N.ward it has the prov. Matto-Grosso (Brazil). Estimated area 74,000 sq. m., and pop. 300,000. A mtn. chain traverses its centre from N. to S., and gives origin to the Xexui and Tabiquari rivers, affls. of the Paraguay, along which river are some extensive marshes. Soil very fertile, and during the rule of the dictator Francia it was carefully cultivated. Rice, maize, cotton, & culinary vegetables, with tobacco of superior quality, yucca, and sugar cane, were raised, and the breeding of cattle, and various manufs. were promoted by arbitrary regulations. A principal product is the yerba mate, or Paraguay tea, an evergreen, the leaf of which is as much used for infusion in the neighbouring parts of S. America, as Chinese tea is in England, and of which 8 million lbs. were formerly exported annually. The government is nominally republican, but under Francia it was an anomalous despotism. Princip. towns, Assnion, the cap., Villa Rica, and Neembucú.

PARAHIBA, or PARAHYBA, two rivers of Brazil.—I. prov. Parahiba, to which it gives name, joins the Atlantic by an estuary, in lat. 7° 8' S., lon. 34° 45' W., after an E.ward course of upwards of 270 m. In summer its bed is dry beyond 20 leagues from its mouth, near which, on its S. b., is the city Parahiba.—II. PARIS, Lutetia, afterwards Parisii, an important city of W. Europe, cap. of France, and of the dep. Seine, situated on both banks of the Seine, and on 2 isls. in its centre. Lat. (of observatory, 193 ft. above the sea) 48° 50' 13" N., lon. 2° 20' 24" E. Pop. (1846) 945,721, or including the fluctuating pop. 1,053,897. Mean temp. of year 51° .3; winter 37° .8; summer 64° .5 Fahr. Mean ann. fall of rain, 25 inches; average number of rainy days, 105; days on which snow falls, 12. In 1848, Paris was estimated to contain 45,000 houses, 1,270 streets, 17 avenues, 37 quays, 21 boulevards, 38 alleys, 133 squares and places, 224 passages and galleries, 105 courts, 163 (impasses) closed lanes, 57 barriers, many of which are noble edifices; 20 gates, and 33 bridges. Paris, considerably enlarged by the line of fortifications with which it has recently been surrounded, extends on both banks of the Seine, over a length of 8 m., circumf. 22 m. This space is divided into 2 distinct portions: 1st, that comprised within the old city wall, erected for the collection of the octroi, or customs; and 2d, the comms. of the banlieue, comprised between the old wall and the line of the new fortifications. The 1st part, which forms the 12 municipal arronds. of the comm. of Paris, is, in many parts, covered with splendid monuments, magnificent hotels and gardens. The houses are generally lofty, and built in a uniform style. The new streets are wide, straight, well-paved, and lighted with gas; but many of the old streets are narrow and crooked; all are, however, better cleansed than they were a few years since. The Seine, which traverses Paris from E. to W., is lined with spacious quays, and planted with trees. Within the limits of the city, it is crossed by 23 bridges, and receives the small stream of Bièvre, or the Gobelins, and the canal of St Martin, which joins those of the Ourcq & St Denis. It here forms 2 islands, the Ile St Louis, and the Ile du Cité; on which last is situated the cathedral church of Notre Dame, a gothic building, in the form of a Latin cross, with a magnificent façade, terminating by 2 sq. towers 295 feet in height; the Hôtel Dieu, the Palais de Justice, and the Pont-Neuf, which latter connects the isl. of the City with both sides of the river. This is the largest, & one of the oldest bridges, in Paris; in its centre is a bronze statue of Henry iv. The portion of Paris situated on the r. b. of the river is the most extensive, and contains the greatest number of public offices. It is also the richest and most commercial, its centre being occupied by the bourse (Exchange of France). Among the many splendid edifices of this quarter, are the palace of the Tuileries, long the residence of the kings of France, and the scene of many of its most remarkable events; the palace of the Louvre, appropriated to rich collections of paintings, sculpture, bronzes, antiquities, and prints; the Palais National, the galleries of which are occupied by elegant shops and cafés; the palace of the Elysée Bourbon; the Hôtel de Ville, and the church of the Madeleine. Its principal streets and squares are the Place de la Concorde, an immense square, decorated with fountains and statues; Place des Victoires, in which is the Bank of France, & an equestrian statue of Louis xiv.; the Place Vendôme, in the centre of which is a triumphal bronze column erected by Napoleon; Rue de Rivoli, one of the finest streets of the city; Rue de la Paix, and Rue Castiglione. Most of these are in the centre, or west of Paris. The chief objects in the E. are the Halle-au-Blé, an immense rotunda, with an iron cupola, near which is the Fontaine des Innocens; the column of July, a bronze monument, erected on the site of the Bastille, in honour of those who fell in the revolution of 1830. The finest & most fashionable promenades are the Boulevards and Champs Elysées, at the W. end of which is the triumphal arch of L'Etoile and Bois de Boulogne; Place du Carrousel, Garden of the Tuileries, and in the E., the cemetery of Père-la-Chaise.

The left bank of the river contains the Faubourg St Germain, the principal residence of the old noblesse; the boulevards are here also planted, but the promenades are not frequented. On this side is the Pays Latin, the seat of the principal educational establishments, as the Sorbonne, College of France, Colleges of St Louis, Louis-le-Grand, Henri iv., Polytechnic School, and the Normal School, inaugurated 1846; the School of Medicine, and Schools of Law. The principal public buildings on this side are the Palace of the Luxembourg, in part appropriated to the exhibition of the works of living artists; Palace of the Fine Arts; the Odeon; Assemblée Nationale; the Palace of the Institute, containing the Mazarene library; the Mint, with a collection of coins, dies, and medals, from the time of Chas. viii.; the Pantheon, a colossal edifice, occupying the highest part of Paris, originally designed for a church, but afterwards appropriated to the remains of eminent Frenchmen; the Hôtel-des-Invalides, an immense military hospital with an elegant dome, in the centre of which is a church containing the tombs of Napoleon, Turenne, and Vauban. It has a library of 17,000 vols., and a collection of models of fortifications. The military school, situated in a vast open space called the Champ-de-Mars; the botanic garden (Jardin des Plantes), and the celebrated tapestry and carpet manufactory of the Gobelins. This quarter also contains the greater number of hospitals, the largest of which, the Salpetriere, has a pop. of upwards of 6,000. Here are also the ruins of the Palais des Thermes, & the hôtel Cluny, founded by Dusommerard, & purchased by the State, containing a museum of arts, arms, and antiquities; the abattoirs (slaughter-houses) of Grenelle and Villejuif, and the artesian well. [GRENELLE.] A great portion of this quarter was built from quarries extending under the river, which formed the celebrated catacombs used as a deposit for the bones found in the cemeteries at the time of their suppression. The space contained between the city wall and the fortified circle is composed of the communes of the banlieue, in which the pop. has greatly increased within a few years, but the greater part of it is still occupied by fields or gardens. These comms. comprise on the right bank, Bercy, Charonne, Belleville, La Vilette, La Chapelle, Montmartre, Les Batignolles, Passy, & Auteuil; and on the left bank Grenelle, Vaugirard, Montrouge, and Gentilly. The approach to the new walls is defended by thirteen detached forts, viz., Romainville, Noisy, Rosny, Nogent, Charenton, and the castle of Vincennes on the E.; Bicêtre, Montrouge, Vanvres, Issy, on the S.; Mont Valerien, on the W.; Aubervilliers, and St. Denis with the Couronne de la Briche, and double Couronne on the N.

Considered in reference to its scientific, literary, and educational establishments, Paris surpasses all the cities of the world; the chief of these are, the college of France, with 28 professors; the university academy of Paris comprising the schools of law and medicine, the best frequented in the world, having in 1846, 7,500 pupils: there being for law 3,000, for medicine 3,000, and for the sciences 1,500, pupils; the normal school of literature and science, the polytechnic school, celebrated for the great men it has educated, with 13 professors and a library of 26,000 volumes; school of mines with a laboratory. The observatory containing a valuable collection of astronomical and mathematical instruments; the Jardin des Plantes, a large botanic garden with museums of natural history and a collection of living animals; conservatory of arts and trades, containing models and descriptions of machinery. Paris is the seat of numerous learned and other societies, among which are the society for the encouragement of national industry, societies of agriculture, geography, geology, statistics, and antiquities. There are 32 libraries in Paris, 9 of which are public; of these the great national library (Bibl. Nationale), is the noblest institution of the kind ever formed. It is divided into 5 sections, containing in 1846—I. printed works & pamphlets, 1,400,000, including duplicates.—II. Manuscripts, 125,000 vols.—III. Medals and antiquities, 150,000 medals and 10,000 gems.—IV. Prints, 1,300,000.—V. Maps and charts, 300,000. The benevolent institutions comprise a deaf-dumb institution, with 12 professors, a school for the blind, a government pawn bank, and numerous civil, maternity, founding, and orphan hospitals. Paris has 5 theatres authorised by the state, viz., the Opera or Academy of music (now called Théâtre de la Nation), Theatre Français (Théâtre de la République), opera Comique, Odeon, Italian theatre, and 14 minor theatres; an olympic circus, panorama, diorama, and géorama. The industrial establishments of Paris, embrace all kinds of manuf. & commerce, but it is especially distinguished for objects of taste and fashion,—furniture, jewellery, trinkets, bronzes, porcelain, clocks and watches, painted paper, perfumery, bonnets, gloves, and carriages. The carpets and tapestries of the Gobelins are held in high estimation, and Paris is celebrated for its mathematical and optical instruments. It is one of the chief centres in Europe for the production of works connected with literature and the fine arts. In 1846, it had 24 daily journals, 11 advertising papers, 262 periodical sheets of journals, reviews, bulletins, and annals of politics, literature, science, arts, and fashions. The commerce of Paris is facilitated by navigation on the river, by its connection with many canals, and by railways to many chief towns of France. [FRANCE.] It has a chamber of commerce with a commerc. library, an exchange which publishes daily returns, & it is the seat of all the principal financial, industrial, and commercial societies in the country. Among the many eminent men which Paris has produced, may be mentioned the great Conde, Prince Eugène of Savoy, Rousseau the poet, Thon the historian, Moliere, Boileau, Voltaire, Rollin, d'Alembert, the painters Lebrun & David, the geographer d'Anville, Lavoisier, Madame Roland and Madame de Staël. Paris was a place of importance in the time of Cæsar; it was then confined to the isl. in the Seine, now called the Ile du Cité, and was cap. of that part of Gaul occupied by the Parisii. Under the Roman emperors it was greatly extended. Clovis fixed his empire here in 508. The establishment of the university in the year 1200, gave it great importance; it was surrounded by walls under Philip Augustus; the inner or city wall (d'Octroi) was built nearly as it now exists, in 1786. The new line of fortifications was commenced in 1840, and finished in 1848. Paris was delivered up to the English in 1420, & held by them for six years. The allied army entered it in 1814-15. The first revolution began 14th July 1789; the second 27th July 1830; and the third on 23d February 1848.

PEKING, or PEKIN (Chinese, Pih-king, "the northern capital"), the cap. city of China, and modern metropolis of the Chinese empire, cap. prov. Chil-i, in a sandy plain, between the Pei-ho, and its affl. the Hoen-ho, 100 m. N.W. the mouth of the former river in the Yellow sea, and 50 m. S. the great wall of China. Lat. of imperial observatory, 39° 54' 13" N., lon. 116° 28' 54" E. Mean annual temperature, 54°.8; winter, 26°.7; summer, 81°.1, Fahr. Pop. has been estimated (probably much too highly) at 2,000,000. It consists of two contiguous cities, each separately encircled by lofty walls, and together entered by 16 gates, and occupying an area of from 25 to 28 sq. m., though much of this space is occupied by gardens and enclosures, the houses seldom being more than one storey in height.

The S., or Chinese city, the seat of commerce, and residence of the majority of the pop., is intersected throughout by 4 wide and regular thoroughfares, which abound with shops of all descriptions, & are continually filled with a motley crowd. At the points where these streets meet each other, are large arches; but except these, and a temple to the god of agriculture, there would seem to be no edifices in this quarter deserving notice. The houses are of brick, with red-tiled roofs, and the city is unpaved and undrained. The Northern, Tartar, or imperial city, consists of three separate inclosures. The outer of these, formerly appropriated to the Tartar garrison, is now mostly occupied by Chinese traders; but it contains 5 of the supreme tribunals of the empire. The 2nd enclosure (Hwang-Ching, "the august city"), is 6 m. in circuit, and entered by 4 large, and several smaller, gates. In it are extensive public granaries, a military arsenal, and seminary; the college and buildings of the Russian embassy, an astronomical and a magnetic observatory, the great temples of ancestors, and of Peace, the latter having attached to it an institution for Buddhist lamas; the national college of China, and the residences of the great dignitaries of the empire. The inner enclosure, or "forbidden city," with walls 2 m. in circumference, faced with yellow tiles, & surrounded by a moat faced with masonry, is appropriated to the public and private palaces of the emperor & empress, & has a magnificent temple of the imperial ancestors, pavilions, gardens, a lake, and an artificial mtn. Outside of both cities are open suburbs; and Peking has, besides its numerous temples & pagodas, a fine mosque, a Greek church and convent, and a Rom. Catholic chapel. About 10 m. W.N.W. is an imperial park, covering at least 12 sq. m., and containing 30 palaces of the emperor and great officers of state. Peking has a large printing and bookselling trade, and manufs. of coloured glass, idols, and other articles; but its inhabs. chiefly depend for subsistence on employment connected with the court. The Pei-ho is navigable for boats to within 20 m., and communicates with the grand canal, by which most of the provisions for the supply of the city are conveyed.

Amer., between lat. 39° 44' and 42° N., and lon. 74° 40' and 80° 35' W., enclosed by the states New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, and Ohio, but at its N.W. extremity, bordering on Lake Erie. Area 43,960 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 2,311,681. Its central part is traversed from S.W. to N.E. by the Alleghany mountains, and watered by the river Susquehanna and its numerous affs. The Delaware forms its E. boundary. Other rivers are the Schuylkill, Lehigh, and Alleghany. It is one of the most productive and best cultivated parts of the Union. In 1840 more wheat was raised in it than in New York state, besides large quantities of maize, oats, barley, buckwheat, and thrice the quantity of potatoes produced in any other of the U. States. In its numbers of live stock it is inferior only to New York and Ohio. Most of the finer fruits of temperate climates are raised, and this state is better adapted for the culture of the grape & mulberry than most others in N. Amer. More iron and coal are raised than in the other states, whence this has become the head quarters of manufacturing and railway enterprise in the Union. Coal raised (1845-6) 700,000 tons. Salt, building stone, and timber, are also important products. At Pittsburg, ironmongery of all descriptions, with steam engines and machinery, are manufactured in large quantities. Cotton, and woollen stuffs and yarn, soap, paper, gunpowder, carriages, and most other kinds of goods are made; and in manufacturing industry, this state ranks immediately after Massachusetts. Foreign trade is carried on chiefly through Philadelphia, but in part through New York, Baltimore, &c. Total value of exports direct (1843) 3,535,256 dollars, do. of imports 7,217,267 dollars. The whole S.E. part of the state is intersected by a network of canals and railways. In 1848, 1,280 m. of canals, and 1,084 m. of railway were completed in the state. Total pub. rev. (1848-9) 4,512,667 dollars. Public debt 40,424,736 dollars. There are eight colleges and 7,845 schools. The state is divided into 55 cos., & sends 28 representatives to Congress. Chief cities, Harrisburg, the cap., Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Lancaster, Reading, & Carlisle. The state was granted to W. Penn by James II. in 1681. Present constitution adopted in 1838. Gov. vested in a gov. and senators, elected triennially, and representatives, elected annually.

It is a polling place for E. div. of co., and the head of a poor-law union.

PERSIA (IRAN), a country of W. Asia, comprising, in its widest acceptation, the region between the Caspian Sea and the Indian Ocean, from the Oxus & Indus to Kurdistan & the Persian Gulf. Its boundaries have undergone many changes, but it is now politically divided into Western Persia, or doms. of the Persian Shah, whose cap. is Tehraun, and Eastern Persia or Cabool. Persia proper lies between lat. 26° and 40° N., and lon. 44° and 61° E., having W. Asiatic Turkey, N. the Russian gov. Transcaucasia, the Caspian Sea, and the desert of Kharesm (Khiva), E. Afghanistan and Beloochistan, and S. the Arabian Sea and Persian Gulf. Area loosely estimated at 450,000 sq. m. Pop. probably 8,000,000.

The following are the great divisions of the country:—

Modern Names.	Ancient Names.	Chief Towns.
Azerbaijan	Media Atropatene	Tabreez

from 2,500 to 3,500 feet above the sea, but traversed by mountain ranges rising to upwards of 7,000 or 8,000 feet, and bounded N.ward by the Elhurz chain, prolonged from Azerbaijan E.ward to the Paropamisian mountains in Afghanistan, and S.ward by another chain stretching from Koordistan E.ward to the mountains of W. Beloochistan. This table land contains in its W. part many irrigated and fertile tracts, but nearly all the E. part of Persia is a wide and irremediable salt desert, forming a portion of that sterile zone which extends from the Atlantic throughout the Sahara of Africa, Arabia, Central Asia, and Mongolia, to the mountains on the N. frontier of the Chinese empire. S. of the table land also, in the provs bordering on the Persian Gulf, the country is mostly parched up and barren, and the heats of summer are almost insupportable. The absence of sufficient water is one of the great disadvantages suffered in Persia. Except the Aras, forming the N.W. frontier, the Sefid-rood and Gurgan, which enter the Caspian Sea, the Kerah, Karun, Jerahi, &c., affls. of the Tigris & Shat-ul-Arab, in Khuzistan, and the Buodemir in Fars, the rivers are quite insignificant, and by far the greater portion of the country is arid and unproductive. Azerbaijan & the Caspian provs. must, however, be excluded from this general description. N. of the Elburz mountains the country is covered with dense forests of oak, elm, beech, &c., interspersed with fine pastures, and numerous orchards and vineyards. The climate of these provs. is very similar to that of Europe, the grains common in which continent, with rice, are plentifully raised. Besides grain, the principal products of Persia are cotton, tobacco, silk, gall-nuts, madder, yellow berries, opium, gum-amoniac, assafoetida, and other drugs; wool, wine, rose water, saffron, dates, and other fruits. Copper mines have been wrought in some of the N. provs., and lead mines in Fars and Kerman. Near Nishapoor are some famous mines of turquoise, a gem peculiar to Persia. Rock salt is abundant in most parts of the country, and salt is also procured from the waters of lakes Urumiyah and Bakhtegan. Coal, iron, naphtha, and garnets, are other chief mineral products. Domestic animals include most species common in Europe, and the camel, wild ass, and argali sheep, with some formidable predatory tribes, are native in Persia. The breeds of horses are very superior, sheep are every where abundant, and with cattle they compose the principal wealth of the wandering tribes of Moguls, Toorks, Uzbeks, and Kurds, who dwell in all the outlying provs. of the kingdom. Principal manufs. are of silk fabrics, of all kinds; in the chief cities, shawls, of goat's hair, especially in Kerman, carpets, felts, cotton cloths, cutlery and arms, glass, pottery, leather, and saddlery. Commerce extensive notwithstanding the absence of any roads but mule tracks. It is chiefly with the adjacent countries, with Russia by way of the Caspian, and with British India and England by way of the Persian Gulf. Exports consist of the native products already enumerated, with copper wares, saffron, specie, skins, and sabres, and they are roughly estimated to amount in all to 3,500,000*l.* in annual value. Imports from India are indigo, chintzes, muslins, calicoes, gold and silver brocades, gums, china ware, sugar, shawls, & metals; from Turkey, European goods and specie; from Russia, iron, broadcloth, calicoes, gold lace, and numerous manufactured goods, tea, quicksilver, and furs; from England, woollen & cotton fabrics, shawls, jewellery, arms, outlery, watches, and me-

Its central part (Irak-Ajemi, and the greater portion of Fars) is a table land. Average height

talic wares in general. A large proportion of the British cottons imported at Trebizond on the Black Sea is intended for the Persian mkt. Principal ports of Persia are Bushire and Gombroon, on the Persian Gulf; and Euzelli, Balfrusb, and Asterabad, on the Caspian Sea. Government despotic. The shah is assisted by a grand vizier, who exercises control over the military & foreign departments, and by a lord high treasurer, who superintends the revenue and home arrangements. Each prov., or important dist. of a prov., is governed by a beglerbeg, usually a prince of the blood, or a nobleman of high rank, who appoints hakims over the subordinate dists. Each town and vill. has its magistrates, who are generally chosen by the people. Ann. revenue of the shah, chiefly derived from land & capitation taxes, custom duties, tribute from wandering races, &c., has been estimated at from 1,500,000*l.* to 2,000,000*l.* The pop. is very mixed. The Parsees, who appear to preserve more fully than the rest a purity of descent from the ancient Persians, are now nearly confined to the city Yezd, and some towns in Kerman, where they still retain fire-worship. The pop. of the towns and settled dists. generally is a race descended from Persians, Turks, Tartars, Georgians, Armenians, Arabs, and all the other nations who have at different periods held sway in the country. They are Mohammedans of the Shiah sect, rejecting the authority of the three first caliphs, on which and other accounts, there is between them and the Turks, Arabs, Bokharest, & most other Mussulmen, a perpetual feud. The Persians are a handsome, active, and generally warlike people. Complexion varying from fair to dark olive, with quick, lively imagination, and agreeable address, versatile and pliable, but insincere, and immoral in their habits. The nomadic tribes consist of Arabs in the S.; Turkman, Moghuls, Uzbeks, in the E. and N.E.; and Kurds in the W. They live in tents, subsisting on the produce of their herds and on plunder; and they furnish most part of the armed force, which is very variable in amount, but has been estim. lately at 80,000 men.

PERSIA, two tnsps. of the U. S., N. Amer., the principal in Missouri, co. Boone. Pop. 2,222.

PERSIAN GULF, an arm of the Indian Ocean, between Arabia and Persia. Lat. 24° to 30° N., lon. 48° to 56° 30' E. Length 550 m., breadth varies to 220 m. At its N.W. extremity it receives the Shat-ul-Arab, formed by the union of the Euphrates and Tigris rivers, and the Karun. It communicates E.ward with the Arabian Sea by a strait 50 miles across. It contains numerous islands, the principal being Kishm, Ormuz, Busheab, and Karak, off its N. or Persian coast, and the E. India Company's and Bahrein isls., on its Arabian side, around which last named an extensive pearl fishery exists. Shores almost every where arid & sterile. On them are the cities Basorah & Bushire, & the towns Congoon, Nackiloo, Gombroon, Zaharah, El Khatif, and Grane.

PERSIE, a chapel dist. of Scotl., co. Perth, comprising the Highland dist. of Bendochy, & some other dists. Pop. about 1,000.

PERTENHALL, a pa. of Engl., co. and 11 m. N.N.E. Bedford. Area 1,680 ac. Pop. 420.

PERTH, a city, royal, parl. and munic. bor., manuf. town, seat of a presbytery and synod, & formerly the metropolis of Scotland, cap. co., in a plain on the r. b. of the Tay, here crossed by a noble bridge of 9 arches, 880 feet in length, 33 m. N.N.W. Edinburgh, lat. 56° 23' 50" N., lon. 3° 26' 20" W. Pop. of city, including 4 pas., 19,293; ditto of royal burgh 12,616; ditto of parl. bor.

20,167. It is partially enclosed by richly wooded hills, well and substantially built, and has altogether a wealthy and elegant appearance. On its N. and S. sides are two spacious parks called Inches. Principal public edifices, the church of St. John, supposed to have been originally erected in the 5th century, with a square tower 155 feet in height, and divided into 3 distinct places of worship, numerous other churches and chapels, the public reservoir, co. buildings, central model prison for Scotland, co. infirmary, lunatic asylum large barracks, the Marshall monument appropriated to the public, with a library of 6,000 vols., the museum of the Perth literary and antiquarian society, the town-hall, king James vi. hospital. Perth has an educational seminary, an elegant structure, a grammar school, an academy, and several other endowed schools, 4 weekly newspapers, 2 local and 4 branch banks, & a custom-house. The Tay is navigable to the city for vessels of considerable burden, and extensive works have been undertaken for forming a new harbour and wet-dock. The general terminus of the Edinburgh and Perth, the Central, the Scottish Midland, and the Dundee, Perth, and Aberdeen, railways, an elegant building, is situated in the W. suburbs; and the Dundee railway crosses the Tay by a wooden bridge. Principal manufactures are those of coloured cotton stuffs, ginghams, shawls, &c., and here are flax-spinning mills, bleach-fields, several distilleries, breweries, corn-mills, and iron foundries, rope-walks, tanneries, and dye-works. The glove trade has declined. Ship building is an extensive and increasing employment, and the salmon fisheries in the Tay are very valuable, about 225 tons of fish being sent to London annually. Other principal exports, manuf. goods, corn, and potatoes. Customs rev. (1847) 19,955*l.* Reg. shipping (1847) 8,706 tons. It has 2 weekly markets, and 5 annual fairs. Races take place in the N. Inch park. Corporation rev. (1849) 5,273*l.* The bor. sends 1 member to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 1,041. About 2 m. N. of the city is Scone, long a royal residence; the palace, rebuilt by its owner, Earl Mansfield, is now an elegant modern mansion. Perth was an important station under the Romans, at the meeting of the three great highways, and it has some remains which have been attributed to Agricola, with various ruins of ecclesiastical buildings. It was also frequently resorted to by the Scottish kings, & was the scene of many historical events. Its vicinity is amongst the most fertile tracts in Scotland.

PERTSHIRE, a large and important co. of Scotland, occupying its centre, having N. the cos. Aberdeen and Inverness, W. Argyle, S. Dumbarton, Stirling, Clackmannan, and Kinross, E. Fife, Forfar, and the Firth of Tay. Excluding a detached dist. on the firth of Forth, it is of a compact circular form; length and breadth about 60 m. each. Area has been estimated at 2,638 m., or 1,656,320 ac., of which upwards of a million ac. are arable or pasture, but according to other authorities, the area above given is much below the truth. Inhabited houses 28,993. Pop. 137,390. Surface extremely diversified; this co. comprises both a highland and a lowland region. The Grampians extend through it in a N.E. direction, and are composed of granite & primary slate. Principal mntns. are Benlawers 3,945 feet, Ben-More 3,944 feet in height, and many of the other principal summits in Scotld. in the dists. Athol, Breadalbane, Strathearn, Strathmore, and Stormont. The S. and lower part of the co. is composed of old red sandstone, intersected by the Ochil & Sidlaw hills, which are of greenstone. The princip. lochs are Lochs Tay, Earn, Rannoch, and Erchie. Perthshire is wholly drained by the Tay, & its affls., the Earn, &c., except its S. part, which is watered by the Teith, Allan and Devon. The course of Gowrie on the Tay is a deep alluvial clay, and amongst the most productive land in Britain; the soil in the mntn. districts, is mostly light, and chiefly adapted for pasturage, sheep and cattle breeding being extensively followed. Agriculture has, however, greatly improved, and considerable quantities of wheat, barley, oats, beans, potatoes, turnips, and fruits, are raised for exportation. Farms vary in size from 50 to 500 ac. Average rent of land (1810) 5s. 6d. per ac. Annual value of land (1843) 551,077*l.*; of all assessed property 613,167*l.* A large part of the co. has within the last century been planted with woods. Some coal is raised in the S.E., limestone, sandstone, marble, and slate are generally abundant, and lead is found in some places. Mannfs., except at Perth, are not very flourishing; the principal are of linen, cotton, and woollen stuffs, leather, and paper. Railways traverse the E. part of co., and communicate with Edinburgh, Stirling, Perth, and Dundee, N. to Aberdeen. Perthshire is subdivided into 79 pas. Principal towns, Perth, Crieff, & Dumblane. It sends 1 member to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 4,287.

PERTH, a dist. of W. Australia, intersected by lat. 32° S., lon. 116° E., having W. the Indian O., and on the other sides the dists. Twiss, York, and Murray. It is watered by the Swan river, which has, 10 m. from its mouth, the town Perth, the cap. of the colony.—II. a township of Upper Canada, dist. and 40 m. W. Johnston, on an affluent of the Rideau. [AMBOY.]

PERTHES, a comm. and market town of France, dep. H. Marne, 16 m. N.W. Vassy. Pop. 725.—Pertuis was an old dist. of France, cap. Vitry-le-Français. It now forms parts of the depts. Marne and Haute Marne.

PERTUIS, a comm. and town of France, dep. Vaucluse, near the Durance, 38 m. E.S.E. Avignon. Pop. 3,722.—Pertuis Bréton and Pertuis d'Antioche are straits which separate the isl. Ré from the W. mainland of France, dep. Charente-Inf., and from the island Oleron.

PERTWOOD (UPPER), a pa. of Engl., co. Wilts., 2 m. N.W. Hindon. Area 600 ac. Pop. 24.

PERU (NORTH and SOUTH), two contiguous & united republics of S. Amer., between lat. 3° 30' and 22° S., and lon. 65° and 81° 20' W., having N. the Ecuador republic, E. and S. the territories of Brazil and Bolivia, and W. the Pacific Ocean.

According to the Calendario for 1848, it has been lately sub-divided into the 11 depts. Amazonas, Libertad, Arechna, Junin, Lima, Huancavelica, Ayacucho, Cuzco, Puno, Arequipa, and Moquegua; & into 65 provs., having a total pop of 1,373,736.

Peru from S.E. to N.W., separatlog it into three regions—the central or Montana, which has an average elevation of 12,000 feet above the ocean; the eastern, forming a part of the great central plain of S. Amer.; and the W. or Valles between the mntns. and the Pacific, and which has an average breadth of 60 or 70 m. The Andes and their branches are estimated to occupy 200,000 sq. m. of the surface, and one peak, the Nevado de Chuquibamba rises to 21,000 feet in height. Principal rivers, the Marañon, Hualлага, and Ucayale with the Apurimac, all having a N.ward course, & tributaries to the Amazon, which waters most part of the N. frontier. About half of the lake Titicaca is comprised in S. Peru. The whole coast region is arid and destitute of timber; and only the Pirra river in this division is at all navigable. Rain rarely falls in the coast valleys of Peru W. of the Andes, but fogs & dews are frequent. Climate on the coast sultry & unhealthy, but higher up mild & salubrious. On the E. slopes of the Peruvian Andes rain falls copiously. Soil in the valleys of the upland region highly fertile, and here the grains of Europe are successfully raised. Extensive pastures also exist in this region, where sheep introduced by Europeans have been acclimated, & multiply with amazing rapidity. The vast plains E. of the mountains have been but imperfectly explored; they appear to be in great part covered with dense forests. In the hotter portions of the country, sugar, maize, cotton, indigo, tobacco, yams, sweet potatoes, cocoa, and fine fruits, with cinchona bark, sarsaparilla, copaiba, vanilla, and other drugs, and valuable timber, are principal products. Peru has long been famous for its mineral wealth. Besides the precious metals, it produces iron, copper, tin, coal, & nitrate of soda. The Sierra, between the two ridges of the Andes, is rich in mines; and at Huancavelica is a celebrated mine of quicksilver. The llama, alpaca, guanaco, and vicuña are natives of the country, and the first especially is used as a beast of burden; mules are, however, mostly employed for travelling. Coarse cotton and woollen cloths and leather goods are pretty generally made, with fine cloaks & blanketting, at Tarma; iron wares at Caxamarca; gold and silver articles, and jewellery, at Lima, Arequipa, and Cuzco: hut in general manuf. goods are imported from Europe & N. Amer., in return for raw produce. The want of roads interposes great obstacles to internal traffic; though since the independence of Peru, a trade has been carried on with the Brazilian dists. on the Amazon by way of the Hualлага, down which cotton, gums, resins, sarsaparilla & wax are exported. The maritime trade is chiefly with the ports on the W. side of America, but that with Europe, is considerable; the exports thither consisting of bullion, bark, chinchilla skins, cotton, copper ore, vicuña, alpaca, and sheep's wool, hides and sugar, amounted in value in 1840, to 1,948,346*l.*, of which amount, bullion and specie stood for 1,562,149*l.* The total value of imports from Great Britain, France, the U. States, and some other countries in the same year were estimated at 2,020,000*l.* In addition, a good deal of produce from Ecuador and Central America reaches Great Britain by way of Peru; and since 1841, a trade has sprung up in guano, of which article 14,450 tons were imported into England from Peru, in 1845. In 1841, the Brit. and Irish produce and manufs. exported to Peru amounted in value to 536,046*l.* Principal commercial ports are Callao, Islay, Payta, Lambeyque, Truxillo, Pisco, Arica, and Iquique. Callao,

The double Cordillera of the Andes traverses

the port of Lima, is the only one of unlimited deposit. The constitution was framed in 1828, on the basis of that of the U. States. The legislative body consists of a senate, and a chamber of deputies, one of the latter chosen for every 20,000 inhabitants by electoral colleges composed of one elector for every vill. of 200 inhabitants. The executive government is vested in a president, popularly chosen for four years, and assisted by a ministry chosen by himself, and a council of state chosen by the legislature. Each dep. has a prefect, and a junta composed of two members from each of its provs. In every prov. is a sub-prefect; in each of its dists. a justice of peace, and in each town, or Indian commune, a mayor. Every vill. entitled to name an elector of deputies, has a municipal body. With a few exceptions every Peruvian enjoys the rights of citizenship. Lima has a university, and other colleges. Lancasterian & other schools are pretty general in the towns. The Roman Catholic is the state religion, but other religions are tolerated. Standing army 3,000 men. Public debt has been stated at 20,000,000 piastres. Peru was conquered from the dynasty of the Incas, by the troops of Pizarro in 1532, from which time it remained one of the most important foreign possessions of Spain, until it acquired independence in 1821.

PERUGIA, Perusia, a city of Central Italy, Pontif. Sta., cap. deleg., 10 m. E. of the lake of Perugia, on the S. declivity of the Apennines. Pop. 13,300. It is enclosed by walls. Public buildings comprise a large cathedral, with several fine paintings, and a library of rare MSS., upwards of 100 other churches, and 50 monastic establishments, all more or less decorated with fine works of art; a majestic city hall, an exchange, now disused, but gorgeously decorated with frescoes; an academy of fine arts, several private palaces, a well endowed university, founded in 1320, with museums of antiquities and minerals, & a botanic garden, a college, public library, hospital, and lunatic asylum, 2 theatres, a ball-court, and bull-ring, a splendidly sculptured fountain, and two celebrated gates of Etruscan architecture. Perugia has little commercial industry beyond a few soap-works, distilleries of brandy and liqueurs, and trade in wine, oil, corn, fruits, and other provisions; but its fairs in Aug. and Nov., for cattle and merchandise, are frequented by a concourse of people from all parts of Central Italy, and numerous visitors are attracted to the city by its agreeable society and abundant works of art.—The Lake of Perugia (Ital. Trasimeno), 10 m. W. Perugia, is situated in a basin enclosed on every side by the Apennines. It is a fine sheet of water, about 30 m. in circ., surrounded by gentle eminences covered with oak, pine, and olive plantations, and it contains three islands.

(1846) including the cap., 990,000. Surface mostly level, soil thin, climate damp and cold, and 2-3ds of the gov. are covered with woods and marshes. Principal rivers, the Plinsa and Luga, flowing to the Gulf of Finland, the Volkhov, Sias, Svir, entering the lake Ladoga, and the Neva, uniting the lake and gulf, and on which is the cap. city. Rye, barley, oats, and some wheat, hemp & flax, are cultivated, but the climate is unfavourable for corn, and the quantity produced is far below the consumption. Around the cap. are many market gardens, kept by German colonists. Timber deals and masts form chief articles of export. Some building stone and lime are obtained, and in the cap. all kinds of manufs. are carried on. Pop. mostly Russians, but comprises many foreigners, most of whom are Lutherans. The gov. is divided into 9 circs. or dists. After St Petersburg, chief towns are Schlüsselberg, Luga, Jamburg, Cronstadt, and Zarskoe-Selo.

PETERSBURG (St.), the modern cap. city of the Russian empire, cap. gov.; founded by Peter the Great in 1703, at the influx of the Neva into the Gulf of Finland, 20 m. E. Cronstadt. Lat. of observatory 59° 56' 5" N., lon. 30° 19' 0" E. Pop. (1846) 500,000, including strangers. Mean temp. of year 39°.6; winter 18°.6; summer 61°.7

Fahr. It stands chiefly on the S. bank of the Neva, but partly on some islands formed by the divergence of the river here into several branches; 9 of its 12 quarters are on the mainland. Being situated on a flat and marshy soil, it is difficult of drainage, and subject to destructive inundations. Great part of the houses are constructed of wood. Its noble public buildings, the breadth of its principal thoroughfares, and its large squares, render it one of the finest cities in Europe. The principal channel of the Neva is bordered by granite quays, and on the side of the mainland it is lined by a succession of magnificent structures, including the new cathedral of St Isaac, the admiralty, the site of the winter palace (which was destroyed by fire in 1837), adjacent to which are the Hermitage, a palace, long the residence of Catharine II., and which comprises the court, theatre, a fine picture gallery, valuable library, and a rich museum. In the same quarter are the marble palace, city hall, senate, and several ministerial offices, the bank, post office, grand bazaar, hotel de l'etat major, and the cathedral of our Lady of Kasan, built on the model of St Peter's at Rome. Close to the quay is the fine bronze equestrian statue of Peter the Great on a huge block of granite, opposite which is a long bridge leading to an island having the exchange, also one of the fine public edifices. The citadel, on a small island in the Neva, contains the mint, and the cathedral of St Peter and St Paul, in which are the tombs of the Russian sovereigns. On an adjacent island are some outworks, and the house in which Peter the Great lived while constructing the original town. Other chief structures are the Anitchkoff & Taurida palaces, the hotel of the acad. of arts, barracks, arsenals, cannon foundry, Mikhailov palace, the vast convent of Smolnoi, numerous hospitals, and the column erected to the emperor Alexander, a granite monolith, 84 feet in height. The S. part of the city is intersected by the Fontanka and other canals, lined by fine quays. Some years ago the city was said to have 156 bridges, of which 12 were of cast iron, 31 of granite, and several suspension bridges. The 5 across the Neva, and its principal branches, are erected on boats, and annually removed before the river is frozen, which is the case for 5 months of the year. The inundations of the Neva often cause great disasters; in that of 1824, 15,000 lives were lost. The university founded in 1819, had, in 1846, 69 professors and 700 students, and here are a medical chyrurgical academy of high reputation, military and theological schools, an oriental institution, school of commerce and navigation, two colleges, high and other schools for both sexes, an imperial library, with 420,000 vols., and 7,000 MSS., an academy of sciences, founded by Peter the Great, & having valuable museums, an astronomical & meteorological observatory, the imperial Russian academy, a Kalmuck institution, a geographical society, a botanic garden, & associations and public institutions of all descriptions. Manufs. of all kinds are carried on, and here are imperial gunpowder, tapestry, and porcelain factories, a cannon foundry, and near the city the extensive glasworks of Osiersk. Next to London and Hamburg, it has the most important foreign trade of any city in Europe. It receives merchandise from all parts of the Russian empire and central Asia, by means of navigable rivers and canals, and one of its most characteristic features is the winter market, in which are seen enormous pyramids composed of the carcasses of cattle, sheep, & hogs, fish, fowls, eggs, and butter frozen into solid masses. Chief exports, tallow, flax, hemp, iron, copper, corn, timber, potash, canvass, and coarse linens, oils, furs, hides, and tar; impts. colonial produce, cotton, & woollen goods, dye stuffs, wines, silks, woollens, hardwares, salt, tin, lead, coal, linens, &c. In 1842, the total imports amounted in value to 10,064,963*l.*, and exports to 5,362,824*l.* Customs' rev. 2,830,221*l.* In the same year, 1,167 ships, aggregate burden 223,947 tons (of which 525 do., burden 117,793 tons, were British) entered, and 1,138 ships, aggregate burden 219,412 tons, left the port.

PHILADELPHIA, Asia Minor. [ALA-SHEHR.]

PHILADELPHIA, a principal city, river port, and formerly cap. of the U. S., of N. America, state Pennsylvania, extending between the Delaware and Schuylkill rivers, above their junction, and for 5 m. along the Delaware, 100 m. from its junction with the Atlantic, and immediately opposite Camden in New Jersey, 28 m. S.W. Trenton, and 80 m. S.W. New York, with both which cities it communicates by railways, as also with Columbia on the Susquehanna, Baltimore, Reading, and Norristown, and by branches with all the great railways of this part of the Union. Lat. 39° 57' N., lon. 75° 10' W. Mean ann. temp. 50°. 8; winter, 30°. 1; summer, 71°. 4. Pop. (1800) 70,287; (1850) with adjacent municipalities, Northern Liberties, Kensington, Spring-Garden, Southwark, and Moyamensing, 409,553. City proper very regularly laid out, clean, handsome, is drained into the Delaware, and well supplied with water from extensive works on the Schuylkill, here crossed by wooden bridges, one of which forms a viaduct for the railw. to Baltimore. Many of the streets are shaded with trees, and the public buildings are mostly of white marble. The principal are the U. S. bank, after the model of the Parthenon at Athens; the U. S. mint, the exchange & post-office, one of the finest edifices in the Union; the U. S. naval asylum, with a fine Ionic portico, and 180 dormitories; the Gerard bank, Gerard college for orphans, founded with a bequest of 2 millions dolls.; the almshouses, with 180 ac. of ground; masonic hall, state paenoptic penitentiary; state prison, a massive castellated Gothic edifice; and the state house, in which the Independence of the Union was declared in 1776. There are upwards of 100 places of worship, including 2 synagogues. Benevolent institutions are very numerous. Amongst the chief are the Pennsylvanian hospital, founded in 1752, possessing a good anatomical museum, a full length statue of Penn, and West's painting of "Christ healing the sick;" Wills' hospital, and deaf-dumb, blind, and Magdalen asylums. The university of Pennsylvania, incorporated in its present form in 1791, has the most flourishing medical school in the U. States, with (in 1846) 404 students; Jefferson medical college, and the Pennsylvanian college, are also important medical schools. The American philosophical society, founded by Franklin & others in 1740, academy of natural sciences, atheneum, historical & other societies, the Friends' national schools, and the library company, all possess good libraries. The Philadelphia museum is reputed to be the best in the Union, and the city has five theatres, and numerous public gardens. Manufs. are in great variety. In 1840, the capital invested in them was estimated at 2,051,600l. The Delaware, here 1 m. across, is navigable to the city for the largest ships. In 1844, 394 ships, aggregate burden 624,011 tons, entered the port, with cargoes valued at 913,848l., and 390, burden 631,976 tns., cleared out, with cargoes to 1,786,651l. in value. Independent of this, the coasting and river trade is highly important. In 1842, 10,457 vessels arrived coastwise at Philadelphia. Burden of shipping belonging to port (1841) 105,805 tons, of which 55,323 do. tonnage were employed in the coasting trade. Large quantities of provisions are brought hither from the interior, and the city is the great depot for coal in the Union, of which material 584,692 tons were brought to it in 1841, by the Schuylkill navigation, independent of that by other channels. The city, independent of its suburbs, is governed by a mayor, 12 select councillors, and a common council of 20 mems. It was founded in 1682 by W. Penn, whose residence, Pennsburg manor, was near the city.—II. a township, New York, 16 m. N.E. Wattertown. Pop. 1,888.

PHILLIPSTOWN, a township, U. S., N. America, New York, 14 m. W. Carmel. Pop. 3,814.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, a large and important group in the Asiatic Archipelago, forming its N. div., and next to Cuba, the most valuable colonial possession of Spain, chiefly betw. lat. 5° 32' and 19° 38' N., and lon. 117° and 127° E., having N. and E. the Pacific O., W. the China Sea, and S. the seas of Sooloo and Celebes. There are at least 1,200 islands, great and small. Principal islands, Luzon, Mindanao, and Palawan, with Mindoro, Panay, Marinduque, Negros, Zebu, Bohol, Leyte, Samar, Masbate, and many of less size. Total area estimated at 120,000 sq. m. The Spanish dominion is stated to extend over only 52,148 sq. m. Pop. estimated at 5 millions: containing of Papuan negro race, & independent tribes, 1,025,000; Malay Indians, 3,700,000; half castes and Chinese, 30,000; the remainder Europeans and native whites. The islands are of volcanic formation, and contain a chain of active volcanoes. Earthquakes also are of frequent occurrence. The group is within the range of the monsoons, and violent hurricanes are common. From May to Sept., the W. coasts are deluged with rain, while the October monsoon brings rain to the E. coasts, at other seasons dry. The high temperature, & abundance of moisture, produce a luxuriant vegetation; so that they are capable of yielding all kinds of colonial, and probably European, produce. Rice, millet, maize, sugar, indigo, hemp, tobacco, coffee, and cotton, are raised; and sago, cocoa nuts, bananas, cinnamon, betel, numerous fine fruits, and timber for ship-building, are among the products. Buffaloes, and most of the domestic animals common in Europe, are reared. There are no predaceous quadrupeds; the cayman is found in the rivers. Pearls, pearl oyster shell, the sea slug, edible birds' nests, and sapan wood, are important articles of export hence to China. Domestic weaving is pretty generally carried on by the females, and straw hats, cigar cases, and earthenwares are made; but the chief manufacture is that of "government Manila" cigars, which occupies 2,000 hands at a royal factory in Manila. The wretched colonial policy of Old Spain, excluded all foreign ships, and Chinese settlers, from these islands, and the trade with the Spanish dom. in America was also confined to that conducted annually by a single ship! But such restrictions have vanished since the revolution, and the colony is now making commensurate progress towards prosperity. In 1842, 149 ships, aggregate burden 46,869 tons, entered, and 162 do., burden 50,226 cleared, at the different ports. Imports amounted in value to 900,080l., one third from England, and more than another third from China, the U. S., and British India. Exports amounted in value to 974,160l., chiefly sent to England, Spain, the U. S., China, and Australia. Manila (which see) is the principal seat of the trade, and also the seat of the government, it being the residence of the captain-general. In each of the larger islands is a lieutenant-governor; and each of the 30 provs., governed by an alcalde, is divided into pueblos, or communes. The R. Catholic religion has been extensively diffused among the Malay pop. Public revenue is derived chiefly from duties on exports and imports, the tobacco monopoly, and a capitation tax, which, in 1837, was paid by 1,305,142 adults, of whom 901,924 belonged to the island Luzon. Armed force amounts to about 7,000 men, 1-10th Spaniards, and the rest Malays. These islands were discovered by Magalhaens in 1521, and settled by the Spaniards in the reign of Philip II., after whom they were named.

PITCAIRN ISLAND, a solitary island in the Pacific Ocean, lat. 25° 3' 6" S., lon. 130° 8' 00" W., about 7 m. in circumf., elevated in the centre, with a peak at each extremity, greatest height, 1,040 feet; of volcanic origin. Soil fertile, but porous, & rather defective in water; well wooded, & climate healthful; thermometer ranging from 59° to 89° Fahr. Prevailing winds S.W. & E.S.E., but it is beyond the limits of the regular trade winds. It is surrounded by rocky shores and has only one accessible landing place at Bounty Bay. The cocoa nut, plantain, banana, & bread-fruit trees flourish, hibiscus, or cloth tree, banyan tree, orange, and others; and the potato, sweet potato, yams, water melons, pumpkin, taro, sugar cane, ginger, turmeric, tobacco, tee-plant, and maize, are cultivated. The isl. contained no indigenous quadrupeds, but goats, hogs, & poultry, have been imported. In 1790, this island was resorted to by the mutineers of the Bounty, consisting of 9 British sailors, 6 native Tahitian men, and 12 women. In consequence of various disorders and massacres, at the end of 10 years, there remained only one Englishman, Adams, the Tahitian females, and 19 children, their offspring. Under the superintendence of this man the children were educated and trained up to habits of industry and morality. In 1825, Capt. Beechey found a most interesting and intelligent colony of 66 persons. In 1831, by the somewhat imprudent sanction of the British government, the colony, numbering 87 persons, was transferred to Tahiti. After remaining 5 months there, and losing 12 of their number by death, the colony, at their own solicitation, were again reinstated in their native island. In 1849, the pop. amounted to 75 males, and 74 females, in all 149; of these, 3 were Englishmen, 1 a native Tahitian woman, the only remaining female of the original migration, & the remainder were natives of the island. They live chiefly on yams, potatoes, and other vegetables, which they raise by their own labour. Annually a chief magistrate and assistant are elected by the votes of the community. They have a church, schools, and comfortable cottages forming a village. The average number of ships which annually visit the island has been for some years about 10, chiefly American whalers, to whom provisions are supplied, in exchange for clothing, &c. The islanders speak and read the English language, are of an active, robust frame of body, dark complexion, with pleasing countenances, and hospitable and engaging dispositions. From the remains of burial grounds, the island would appear to have been occupied by inhabitants at a period antecedent to the visit of the mutineers of the Bounty. It was seen by Carteret in 1767, and named by him after one of his officers.

Except a portion of the Pampas, which is watered by the Rio Negro, Colorado, and Desaguadero rivers, nearly all the country belongs to the basin of the Plata river, the great estuary of which is between this territory and Uruguay. The depts. Mendoza, La Rioja, Catamarca, and Salta along its W. and N. frontier are mountainous, and some elevated ranges are scattered over Cordova, and some parts of the country E. of the Parana; but the rest of this region consists chiefly of two immense plains,—the N. watered by the Salado, Vermejo, Pilcomayo, &c., forming part of the Gran Chaco which extends into the E. half of Bolivia; and the S. or Pampas, a plain covered alternately with luxuriant pasturage, vast crops of gigantic thistles, and interspersed with a multitude of salt lakes, some of large size. By far the most important product is cattle. Millions of oxen wander at large across the plains, or are reared on breeding estates of vast extent. Horses are also in immense herds, and mules are bred for sale to Peruvian and other traders. The breeds of sheep and hogs are of inferior quality. The guanaco, llama, and vicuña, abound in the vicinity of the Andes: and the native animals comprises the puma, jaguar, and armadillo; the bischacha, the burrowings of which render excursions in the Pampas sometimes dangerous; and the small quadrupeds which furnish the nutria and chinchilla skins. North of Corrientes, cotton, tobacco, rice, the sugar-cane, and indigo are raised: maize, wheat, and other grains are principal articles of culture in the S., and wheat has latterly become an article of export. Other products are cochineal, cocoa, madder, cinchona bark, Paraguay tea, and various fruits; of the last, some introduced by Europeans, have been found to flourish satisfactorily. In the dep. La Rioja, from 8,000 to 10,000 small barrels of strong wine are made annually, and sent into Cordova and the neighbouring depts.; & a good deal of full-bodied wine and brandy is furnished to Buenos Ayres from the dep. Mendoza. All agricultural processes, however, are in the most backward condition. Salt effloresces in large quantities on the surface of the plains, and here are some mines of rock-salt. Coal is reported to be plentiful in the S.W., and sulphur, alum, mineral pitch, &c., in the vicinity of the Andes; but few, if any, mines are wrought. The Indians of the Chaco manuf. yarn, ropes, fishing-nets, and other articles from the fibres of the aloe, with saddle-cloths, blankets, and other fabrics, which they dye with great skill, and sell to their more civilized neighbours; and in Cordova similar goods, morocco leather and turned wares are manufd., but in general manufd.

goods are imported from abroad in return for wool produce. The foreign trade is wholly monopolised by Buenos Ayres. Gov. is nominally republican, and the legislative power in theory vested in a junta of 44 deputies, half annually renewed by popular election, and in a senate of 2 deputies from each department; but from 1835, a nearly absolute dictatorship has existed in the person of Rosas. Public rev. was in 1837 estim. at 12,000,000 dollars, which was insufficient to meet the ordinary expenditure. The subsequent state of disorder and prolonged war with the neighbouring state Uruguay has precluded our obtaining any accurate recent statement of the internal condition of this confederation. The country was discovered in 1517, and settled in 1553 by the Spaniards, under whom it was created into a viceroyalty. The English made an unsuccessful attempt on it in 1807. Its independence of Spain dates from 1816.

PLATA (RIO DE LA), or the PLATE RIVER, one of the great rivers, or rather a great estuary of S. Amer., Plata confed., formed by the junction of the Parana and Uruguay rivers, in lat. 34° S., lon. 58° 30' W., its basin lying S. of those of the Amazon, Tocantins, and San Francisco, and its numerous tributaries draining most part of the Plata, Paraguay, and Uruguay territs. with considerable portions of Bolivia & Brazil. The estuary resulting from their union is 200 m. in length N.W. to S.E., and where it joins the Atlantic Ocean, is 170 m. across (betw. Maldonado & Cape St Antonia); its centre being about lat. 35° 30' S., lon. 56° W. Its muddy waters can be traced in the ocean 200 m. from its mouth. The total length of the Plata & the Paraguay has been estim. at nearly 2,500 m.; and from the ocean to the isl. Apipe in the Parana, at least 1,250 m., there is a continuous and safe navigation for vessels of 300 tons. The Aguapehy, an affl. of the Paraguay near lat. 15° 40' S., lon. 59° 20' W., is separated only by a portage of 3 m. from the Alegre, a tributary of the Guapore, and were a canal to be made to connect the two streams, a complete system of internal navigation throughout nearly all S. PLYMOUTH, a parl. & munic. bor., seaport town, and naval station in England, co. Devon, hundred Roborough, on the E. side of a peninsula, between the rivers Plym and Tamar, at the head of Plymouth Sound, 37 m. S.W. Exeter, communicates by railway with that city. Lat. of Mount Wise 50° 22' N., lon. 4° 10' 2" W. Pop. of bor., which comprises the suburb Stonehouse on the W. and the pa. Stoke Damerel, 36,527; but with the adjacent town Devonport, the bors. have an united area of 2,300 ac.; pop. 80,059. The town of Plymouth stands on uneven ground, and is irregularly laid out, but the buildings have a substantial appearance. Between it and the Sound is the Hoe, a fine open space, surmounting a cliff, and on which is the citadel, a bastioned fortress, containing a governor's residence, and extensive barracks; in this direction some new and handsome streets have been laid out. Principal edifices in the town are the royal hotel, and theatre, atheneum, public library, royal union baths, Freemasons' hall, exchange, new market place, guildhall, with the jail, several hospitals, and barracks. St Andrew's church is large, & has a square embattled tower, & here are 3 other pa. churches. The structures connected with the naval establishments are outside of the town. The dockyard is at Devonport (which see), and is in most respects similar to that of Portsmouth, with the advantage of its various buildings being more substantially constructed of stone, & its docks, & roofings of the most solid character; it has, however, a less extent than that of Portsmouth. In it is an observatory commanding a very noble view. The naval and royal military hospitals at Stonehouse, the victualling office at Devil's (or Duval's) point, the gun wharf, and the military prison, are all fine stone edifices. Plymouth harbour is double, consisting of the Hamoaze, or mouth of the Tamar opposite Devonport, adapted for the largest ships of war; & the Catwater, or estuary of the Plym, immediately E. Plymouth, and on which are the vills. Oreston, Hoo, Turnchapel, with various wet and dry docks, now chiefly appropriated to merchant-shipping. Plymouth has a large trade with London, Bristol, Newcastle, Newport; it imports a good deal of W. India colonial produce, and timber from the Baltic and N. America, and it has manufs. of sail cloth, refined sugar, glass, soap, and starch, a large distillery, and extensive pichard & other fisheries. Reg. shipping of port 394 vessels, aggregate burden 34,808 tons. Customs rev. (1847) 108,055l. Its institutions comprise a grammar and other schools, the natural history society of Devon and Cornwall, public, medical, law, & theological libraries, and a Mechanics' institute, & charities to about 2,300l. a year. It has a branch of the bank of England, & several other banks. Corp. rev. (1848) 14,154l. Mkts. Monday, Thursday, and Saturday. It sends two members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 2,231. Among its distinguished natives was the famous Sir F. Drake.—Plymouth Sound is an inlet of the English channel, between the cos. of Devon & Cornwall. Length 3 m., breadth 4 m. At its N.E. & N.W. extremities the Plym and Tamar rivers enter it, forming respectively the harbours opposite Plymouth and Devonport. On its E. side is Bovisand bay, & on its W. are Cawsand bay and Mount Edgecumbe. Shores abrupt. It contains several isls., the principal being Mount Batten with a fortification immediately opposite the Hoe of Plymouth. The sound has been formed into an excellent naval harbour by the Plymouth Breakwater, a granite and marble structure built across its entrance, 1,700 yards in length, 16 do. in width at top, with a light-house on its W. extremity.

PLYMOUTH, a seaport town, U. S., N. Amer.,

POLA, Pietas Julia, a decayed marit. town of Illyria, near the S. extremity of the peninsula Istria, 19 m. S.S.E. Rovigno. Pop. 924. It is enclosed by Venetian walls of the 15th century, and has a cathedral on the site of an ancient temple, 3 Greek churches, some convents, & one of the best harbours on the Adriatic. It was an important city under the Romans, & its former magnificence is attested by a fine amphitheatre, several temples, and other remains.

POLAND (KINGDOM OF), a country of Europe, annexed to Russia, of which it forms the W. portion, comprised between lat. 50° 4' and 55° 6' N., and lon. 17° 40' and 24° 18' E., bounded E. and N.E. by the Russian govts. Vilna, Grodno, and Volhynia, from which it is partly separated by the Bug and Niemen rivers, S. by Galicia and Cracow, W. by Prussian Silesia and Posen, and N. by E. and W. Prussia. Cap. Warsaw. It is divided into 6 govts. Area & pop. as follows:—

Governments.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. 1847.
Warsaw, - -	14,274	1,555,950
Radom, - -	9,327	954,034
Lobio, - -	11,975	1,013,434
Plock, - -	6,443	619,997
Augustowo, -	7,266	617,318
City of Warsaw, -		166,597
Total,	49,290	4,837,700

Surface a vast plain, with a mean elevation of 300 to 500 feet above the Baltic, except in the S., where offsets of the Carpathian mountains rise to 1,000 ft. It is well watered, and covered with extensive forests. Chief rivers, the Narew, Niemen, Vistula, Bug, and Warta. There are many small lakes and marshes in the N.E. dists. Climate extreme. Summer very hot, mean temp. 90°; winter excessively cold, temp. 10° below zero. The soil is snow-clad and frozen for five months in the year. Soil sandy loam, resting mostly on granite; generally fertile. Agriculture has recently been much improved, and corn is exported. The chief crop for home consumption is rye. Buck-wheat, barley, and oats, are also cultivated. The grain called Danzig white wheat is grown in the S. provs. Building-timber, hemp, flax, and tobacco, are important products. The cattle and sheep are of inferior breeds. Chief mineral products, bog iron, copper, lead, zinc, and coal. The celebrated salt mines of ancient Poland are in Galicia. Nearly all the commerce is in the hands of the Jews, who form a tenth-part of the pop. In the 15th century Poland extended from Russia in the E., to Germany on the W., and from the Baltic on the N. to Turkey on the S. Its area was larger than that of France, and its population is supposed to have amounted to 15,000,000. It was then divided into Great Poland, Little Poland, and Lithuania, which was incorporated with it in 1386. At the dismemberment of Poland in 1773, the three neighbouring powers, Russia, Prussia, and Austria, appropriated nearly one-third of the territory. Russia & Prussia, on the second partition in 1793, seized about half of the remaining portion, and the third partition in 1795, put an end to the republic. The last king of Poland, Stanislaus Augustus, died at St Petersburg in 1793. In 1807, Napoleon united a great part of ancient Poland under the name of the Grand Duchy of Warsaw; this continued till 1815, when the kingdom of Poland was formed of the greater part of the former grand duchy. This state, of which the emperor of Russia was king, had a constitution, a separate army, and the use of the national language. It lasted till 1830, when a revolution took place, which terminated in 1831 by the surrender of Warsaw to the Russians, and the dispersion of the Poles. In 1832, Poland was declared an integral part of the Russian empire. A fresh attempt to restore its independence was made at Cracow in 1846, which ended in the subjugation of this last remnant of ancient Poland, and its annexation to Austria. [GALICIA POSEN.]

POLYCARO, an isl. of the Grecian Archipelago, gov. Naxos, 16 m. E. Milo. Area 20 sq. m. Pop. 200. Surface rugged, but it yields sufficient corn, &c., for home consumption. On it is a village of the same name.

POLYNESIA ("many islands") includes the multitude of islands scattered over the Pacific Ocean, and comprehends a belt chiefly within 30° on each side of the equator, and from lon. 135° E. to 135° W. Including New Zealand, the boundary extends S. of the equator to lat. 47° S. The islands are distributed into numerous groups, and these groups, of an elongated form, have a general direction from N.W. to S.E., and are composed of one or more larger islands, and numerous smaller ones. The principal groups to the N. of the equator, are the Pelew, Ladrone, or Mariane, Caroline, Radack, Marshall, Gilbert, and Sandwich isls. S. of the equator are New Ireland, New Hebrides, New Britain, Feejee, Friendly, Navigator's, Solomon's, Society, Mendana or Marquesas, Low Archipelago, Cook's, Austral, & other minor groups, besides numerous detached islands, as Easter and Pitcairn isls. With the exception of Hawaii, the largest isl. of Polynesia, the most considerable of the others range from 20 to 60 and 100 m. in circumf., while many do not exceed a mile or two in length. These islands are all, more or less, of coral formation; the low Archipelago, Society isls., Marshall, and Carolines presenting the regular atoll form, with circular reefs and lagoons. The Friendly, New Hebrides, Solomon's, and Sandwich islands present fringed reefs and have active volcanoes; summits of mntns. varying from 2,000 to 13,000 feet. In the lower coral isls. the elevations do not exceed 500 ft. In the atoll coral isls., Darwin has supposed that a depression of surface is taking place, and that the volcanic isls. are either stationary or rising. From the great predominance of ocean, the temperature of Polynesia is comparatively moderate, the climate delightful, and salubrious. Mean annual temp. of Sandwich isls. 77°; temp. of Society isls. 70° to 80°, and rarely 90°, Fahr. The S.E. tropical wind generally prevails, but N.W. and S.W. winds are not uncommon. Thunder storms and water spouts are common. Hurricanes are rare, and earthquakes slight and not of frequent occurrence. The refreshing coolness of the trade winds, and a regular but not excessive supply of moisture are favourable to a luxuriant vegetation. Soil in the valleys & in the riv. courses, a rich volcanic mould; on the mountains less fertile. Both vegetable and animal productions are limited as to number of species. In the islands of the middle and eastern divisions not more than 500 species of plants are found. This number increases towards the W. & N.W. The bread fruit, peculiar to this region, the cocoa, banana, plantain, banyan, sngar-cane, yam, and cotton-plant, paper mulberry, and a species of chesnut are indigenous. Other trees and plants of tropical climates have been introduced and flourish; and arrow-root, sweet potatoes, the common potatoe, & maize, are now reared abundantly. There are several timber trees, especially sandal-wood, a few spices, & ornamental flowers, which however, have little odour or decided colour. The islands were all remarkably deficient in animals, thus indicating their isolated and comparatively recent origin. Hogs, dogs, and rats were the only quadrupeds; snakes, or other reptiles are confined to Navigators' group; vampire bats are found in some of the isls. Land birds are not numerous, owls, parroquets, pigeons, and some passerine forming the most remarkable; wild ducks, and other water fowls are more plentiful. Turtles resort in great numbers to many localities, and fish are plentiful on the coasts. Several species of whales, the cachalot or sperm whale, Cape whale, hump back, and black fish are peculiar to the seas of the Pacific, and their capture has been the chief inducement for ships visiting these regions. Oxen have been introduced from New S. Wales, and thrive well; and horses from S. America. The natives of Polynesia are in general a well-formed, tall, active, & intelligent people. There are two distinct races, one apparently of Malay origin, by far the most numerous and intellectual, and spread over all central and eastern Polynesia, and speaking one common language, though varying in dialects. The other a negro or Papuan race, with negro features and colour, and crisped mop-like hair, growing in separate tufts, speaking a distinct language and exhibiting an intellect of an inferior grade, probably the first settlers of the islands, and now confined to the W. part of Polynesia, and inhabiting partly or wholly New Guinea, New Britain, New Ireland, the Solomon isls., New Caledonia, New Hebrides, and part of the Ladrone isls. In some of the isls., there is a partial intermixture of the two races, and in others an apparent Caucasian intermixture, indicated by the ample beard and prominence of the features. Some of the western isls., as the Ladrone, were discovered by Magalhaens in 1521, the Marquesas by Mendaña in 1595, but it was not till 1767, that Wallis, and subsequently Cook, explored and described the leading islands of this region. Soon after this, missionaries began to settle in the islands, and after many discouragements, at last have succeeded in promoting Christianity and civilization in some of the principal islands; though cannibalism and savage ferocity still prevail in the majority. In 1844, there were 45 British and American missionary stations in Polynesia, the principal being in the Sandwich isls., Tahiti, and Society isls., Friendly isls., Feejee isls., New Hebrides, and Hervey isls. The pop. of these islands varies continually from wars, migrations, and occasional pestilence. Tahiti and some others when first discovered, were conjectured to be greatly more populous than at present, but no proper data exist for affording even an approximation to the real numbers. Probably the population of the whole of Polynesia does not exceed 1 million or 1 million and a half. [For further information, see the individual groups and islands.]

POLZIN, a town of Prussian Pomerania, reg. & 31 m. S.W. Köslin, on the Wipperbach. Pop. 3,030. It has a castle, mineral baths, & manufs. of wollen cloth, leather, and tobacco.

* Excluding about 10,000 Jews, the pop. is only approximate. In 1819 it was estim. at 2,529,329; 1835, 2,732,436; & 1838, 2,771,338.

The territory, S. of the principal chain of the Apennines, is watered by the Tiber and its affluents the Chiana, Topino, Nera, and Teverone, which flow S.W. to the Mediterranean. N. of the Apennines, it is watered by the Lamone, Savio, Marecchia, Metauro, Esino, Musone, Potenza, Chienti, and Tronto, small torrents from the Apennines; and the N. frontier is traversed by the chief branch of the Po: all tributaries to the Adriatic. The principal lakes are those of Perugia, Bolsena, Albano, and Bracciano; and the marshes of Comacchio, and Pontine marshes. The territory is traversed longitudinally by the chain of the Apennines, of which the highest point, within its limits, is Monte Velino, 8,210 feet. In the N., it comprises part of the great plain of the Po, and in the S.W. the undulating plain called the Campagna di Roma, terminating in the Pontine marshes, noted for insalubrity. The climate varies greatly in different quarters. In the legations, situated on the N. of the Apennines opposite the snow-clad Alps, the winter is severe, while in the S. the climate is very mild, except in the mountain districts; and the region of the Campagna of Rome would be a blooming garden, but for the fatal effects of the miasma, which forces the cultivators of the soil to seek refuge at night in the few scattered towns near its borders. The mean temp. of the year at Rome is 60° 4; warmest month 76°; coldest month 45° Fahr. The soil is generally fertile, but neglected; it is calculated that only 1-3d of the superficies is under cultivation; much of the surface affords excellent pasturage, which is occupied by great herds of buffaloes. Considerable flocks of sheep and many horses are reared; great numbers of hogs roam in the forests of the Apennines. Agriculture is conducted in a very slovenly manner, and the implements are of the rudest kind. The chief crops are wheat, maize, pulse, hemp, wine, oil, and tobacco; oats, barley, and rye are grown in the N. legations; in the extreme S, sugar, indigo, and cotton, are cultivated to a small extent, and cork trees are numerous. The wines are of inferior quality. Chestnuts form a considerable article of food. There are in the states mines of iron, lead, sulphur, alum, vitriol, and other volcanic products, but they are all nearly unproductive, except the sulphur mines near Rimini. Salt is made in the lagoons Ostia, Comacchio, and Cervia, to the amount of more than 84,000,000 lbs. annually. The fisheries are mostly conducted by the inhabs. of the Kingdom of Naples. Manuf. industry is confined to the large cities and for home consumption; it comprises silks, leather, gloves, paper, musical strings, iron and glass wares, a few cotton goods at Rome, crape and sausages at Bologna, cordage, soap, cream of tartar, and glue. Commerce limited, and conducted chiefly with the Mediterranean states. In the Pontif. sta. there were, in 1845, 9 archbishoprics, 52 bishoprics, 13 abacies, 1,824 monasteries, & 612 convents. Secular clergy were estim. at 35,000, monks 10,000, nuns 8,000. Education is conducted in universities, colleges, seminaries, and elementary schools. The seats of the seven universities are Bologna, the most ancient & celebrated in Italy, Rome, Perugia, Ferrara, Camerino, Urbino, and Macerata, the last 4 founded in 1824; in 1841 these were attended in all by 2,400 students. The proportion of students in the state schools was only 1 in 50. No general provision is made for the education of the lower orders, and the instruction imparted is very inferior in quality. The government was, till recently, an absolute elective monarchy; the Pope chosen by the college of cardinals from their own body, was at the same time the head of the universal Romish church, and a temporal sovereign. Previous to the 7th century, the popes were only bishops of Rome; the basis of their temporal power was laid by the successive donations of Pepin, Charlemagne, and the emperor Henry III., but was consolidated only in the 16th century. At the French revolution of 1790, the popes lost their possession of Avignon and Venaissin, and in 1797 their domain was further diminished by the legations ceded to the Cisalpine republic. In 1808, Napoleon divided the other states between the kingdom of Italy and the French empire, but in 1814, all these territories were restored to the Pope, except Avignon. In 1847, Pope Pius ix. established a constitutional parliament, consisting of 99 deputies popularly elected, but the revolution of 1848, which commenced by the assassination of Count Rossi, 15th November, has overturned these arrangements. At present (1850) there is no settled government, the pope is absent from his dominions, and affairs in Rome are conducted partly by cardinal legates, and partly by the French military authorities. The papal forces were governed by a board, whose head was a prelate; in 1846 they comprised 14,680 men, including the Swiss guard raised in 1802; the merchant marine amounted, in 1840, to 1,234 vessels, of which 90 were engaged in foreign commerce, the others were coasters and fishing craft. Public revenue derived from taxes on land and provisions, customs, and lotteries, amounted in 1843 to 7,080,000 Roman scudi; expenditure 7,934,000 scudi; deficit 854,000 scudi. The interest of the public debt absorbed 38 per cent. of the income.

PONTINE MARSHES, Paludi Pontine, a vast marshy tract of Italy, in the S. portion of the Campagna di Roma, extending along the coasts of the Mediterranean, from Cisterna on the N., to Terracina on the S., a distance of 25 m. It is traversed by the road from Rome to Naples. From the time of the Roman republic, great efforts have been made to drain this tract, but its drainage is not yet completed. The region is highly fertile, but extremely pestilential.

Area of bor., including also the town and pa. of Portsea, 5,090 ac. Pop. 53,027. Area of pa. 110 ac. Pop. 9,354 The town, which is the most perfect fortress in Great Britain, is enclosed by bastioned ramparts, faced with masonry, planted with elms, surrounded by trenches and out-works, and entered by 4 carriage ways. It has a good main street, and much of the town is well built and improving, though many of its bye streets are of a very inferior character, and its houses and public buildings are nearly all of brick. On its W. side is an insular quarter termed the "Point," bounding its commercial port, and a seat of very active traffic in time of war: in this quarter, facing the mouth of the harbour, some very extensive additions have been recently made to the fortifications between the "Platform" and the "Round Tower." Princip. buildings within the walls are the pa. church with a cupola and vane 120 feet in ht.; garrison, Wesleyan, independent, & unitarian chapels; gov.-house, town hall and jail, new mkt.-house, marine and other extensive barracks, the buildings of the philosophical society, new almshouses, Green-row ball-rooms, the theatre, workhouse, and some large breweries. The town of Portsea forms its N. suburb, separated from it by the mill-dam creek, but enclosed within an additional line of fortifications connected with those of Portsmouth. [PORTSEA.] Within this town is the naval dock-yard, containing basins, wet and dry docks, large warehouses, anchor forges, iron and copper mills, rope-houses, and every department necessary in the construction and outfit of ships of war. In the dock-yard are also the royal naval college, a chapel, and the residence of the port-admiral; the area, added to it on the N. E., is intended partly for the formation of building docks for war-steamers; upwards of 2,000 workmen are employed in this yard. Between the dock-yard and the town of Portsmouth is the gun-wharf or arsenal, containing an armoury with 20,000 stand of small arms, extensive artillery and ammunition depots, and good quays bordering on the harbour. E. of the town ramparts and out-works, are Southsea common and the suburb of Southsea, now frequented in summer as a watering place; on the shore facing Spithead and the Isle of Wight are Southsea castle, and farther E. ward Cumberland and some other forts, which, with Blockhouse and Monckton forts on the mainland S.W., protect Spithead and the approach to the harbour. Besides Portsea and Southsea, the large suburb of Landport, which extends almost to the centre of Portsea isl., is included in the bor., on the extreme limits of which are the barracks of Tipner and Hilsæa. Haslar hospital and the victualling department at Gosport, are dependencies of this port. Public institutions comprise a free grammar school, St Paul's academy, a mechanics' institution, savings bank, general hospital, female penitentiary. Lisbon. Length, N. to S., 368 m., breadth 80 to 140 m. Area and pop. as follow:—

Provinces.	Area in sq. miles.	Population 1841.
Minho, . . . . .	2,044	466,730
Douro, . . . . .	5,572	539,938
Tras-os-Montes, . . . . .	4,023	369,840
Beira (Upper & Lower), . . . . .	5,893	615,238
Estremadura, . . . . .	7,256	783,875
Alentejo, . . . . .	10,024	376,590
Algarve, . . . . .	2,151	130,329
Total, . . . . .	35,268	3,412,500

There is no census nor any means of ascertaining the population prior to 1820. In 1823, Balbi estimated the population of the continental states at 3,173,000, and in 1841, at 3,460,000.

The surface has a general inclination from N.E. to S.W. It is traversed by several mountain ranges, chiefly prolongations of the Spanish mountains.—I. the Serra Estrella, a continuation of the Serra de Gata, highest point 7,524 feet in elevation.—II. the Serra de Monchique, a continuation of the Sierra Morena. N. and S. of these extend fine plains, watered by the Minho, the Duro, Tagus, and Guadiana, which enter the country from Spain, and with the Mondego and the Sado, rising in Portugal, all flow W. to the Atlantic Ocean. The largest plain is that of Alentejo, S. of the Tagus. There are no lakes in Portugal, but several salt marshes. The coast line, 500 m. in extent, presents along its shores many fine harbours. The climate, in general healthy, is especially so in the elevated coast regions, and on the plateaux of the interior, the exceptions are the vicinity of the salt marshes, and parts of the banks of the Tagus and Mondego. Mean temp. of year at Coimbra 62°; Lisbon 61°-3 Fahr. Rain is very abundant on the W. coast, the greatest amount falls between Oct. and April. Snow is very rare in the S. provs., but falls heavily on the mountains of the N. provs.; it lies permanently on Mount Gaviara (prov. Minho), 7,865 feet in elevation. Earthquakes occur frequently in the S., and in the vicinity of

Lisbon. The soil is naturally rich, & the country picturesque. Husbandry is conducted in the most slovenly manner, and there are few passable roads. Wheat, barley, oats, flax, and hemp, are cultivated in the elevated tracts, rice in the lowlands, olives, oranges, lemons, citrons, figs, & almonds, in the Central and S. provs., and at the S. extremity, the American aloe, the date, and other tropical plants. The cultivation of the vine is the most important branch of industry, and the produce of the vineyards, watered by the upper Douro, termed port, is the staple export. There are extensive forests of oak in the N., chesnut in the centre, and the sea pine, kermes and cork in the S. The olive oil is of inferior quality. Mules and asses are the chief beasts of burden, oxen are used for draught in the provs. Cattle and sheep are reared in considerable numbers, but the wool is not of fine quality. Goats and hogs are numerous, and fish abound in the rivers and on the coasts. Iron, marble, and salt, are the chief mineral products; the mines of tin, lead, and antimony, are not worked. There are numerous salt marshes on the coast, and 200 mineral springs are enumerated. The manufs. are very limited, chiefly arms and porcelain, at Lisbon, woollens at Portalegre and Fundao, cotton spinning at Thomar, jewellery and trinkets at Lisbon and Oporto, glass at Marinha-Grande, paper at Alemquer, silks at Braganza and at Campo-Grande, near Lisbon. The trade of the country is mostly conducted by the English and other foreigners. The government of Portugal is a constitutional monarchy, the religion of the state is Roman Catholic, but Jews are tolerated. The church is governed by a patriarch, 3 archbishops, and 14 bishops. The inquisition was abolished in 1821, and its enormous revenues have been applied to state purposes. Educational establishments are very defective, with the exception of the cap., which contains extensive libraries, an observatory, and several literary and scientific institutions. Portugal, which forms the greater part of the ancient Lusitania, was successively conquered by the Romans in the 2d century B.C., by the Visigoths in the 6th century, by the Arabs in 712 and 715, and afterwards by the Christians of Spain. In 1139, Alphonse Henriquez, son of Henry of Burgundy, having gained a victory over the Moors at Ourique, was proclaimed the first king of Portugal. In 1348, one half of the pop. died of the plague. The dynasty of Burgundy governed the country till 1380. About this period the country rose to the highest point of political and commercial splendour. The Portuguese discovered the greater part of the W. & S. coasts of Africa, and the maritime route to India, and founded numerous colonies; they also took possession of Brazil, and retained it till 1826, when it finally separated itself. On the invasion of the French in 1807, the royal family went to Brazil. From 1827 to 1833, the throne was usurped by Don Miguel; in 1836 several changes were introduced, and the existing constitution was established. The once flourishing and vast colonies of the Portuguese in Asia are now reduced to the small territories of Goa, Damaun, and Macao, & settlements in the islands Solor, Timor, and Midoro. In Africa, Portugal retains the Capitanies of Angola and Congo in S. Guinea, Mozambique on the E. coast, some estabs. in Senegambia, and the islands of Madeira, Cape Verd, Princes Island and St Thomas. Army (1849) 28,100 men, of whom only 1,800 were in active service. Navy 2 ships of the line, 6 frigates, 8 corvettes, 11 gun brigs, 7 schooners, and 2 steamers. Rev. (1843-4) 2,214,225. Expend. 2,519,100. Public Debt (1846-7) 1,673,284.

of Central Europe, situated between lat. 49° 12' and 55° 53' N., and lon. 6° and 22° 50' E., cap. Berlin. Prussia is composed of two distinct, and very unequal portions, separated by the territories of Brunswick, Hessen, Waldeck, Lippe, and Nassau. The E. most and largest portion, or Prussia E. of the Weser, is bounded E. by Russia, S. by Austria, Saxony, and Electoral Hessen, W. by Brunswick, Hanover, and Mecklenburg, and N. by the Baltic Sea.
The W. portion, or RHENISH PRUSSIA (Rhein Preussen), is bounded E. by H.-Darmstadt, Nassau, Electoral Hessen, Waldeck, Brunswick, Lip-pe, and part of Hanover; S. by France, Rhenish Bavaria, and parts of Oldenburg and Hamburg;
W. by the Netherlands, Belgium, and Luxemburg; and N. by Hanover. Besides these great portions, Prussia possesses some small dists. in the duchies of Saxony & the princips. of Hessen.
The distance between the E. and W. extremities of Prussia, is 715 m.; the E. portion is 550 m.
long, E. to W., and 185 to 435 m. broad, N. to S.; and the W. portion 250 m. in length, N. to S., and 45 to 120 m. in breadth, E. to W. Divisions, area, and pop. as follows:—

Westphalia,	7,818	1,445,719	Münster.
Rhenish Prussia,	10,351	2,763,080	Cologne.
Total,	107,958	18,112,948	„

In 1815 the population of Prussia was only 10,250,000.

The surface of Prussia is in general flat, except in the W. (prov. Saxony), where it is traversed by parts of the Harz mtns. and the Thüringwald, and in the S. between Silesia & Bohemia, by the Riesen Gebirge, or Giant mtns. The E. provs. belong to the basin of the Baltic, in which the chief rivers are, the Memel, or Niemen, the Pre-gel, Vistula, and Oder, with its affluent the War-ta. The W. provs. belong to the basin of the North Sea, and are watered by the Elbe, and its affluents the Saale, Havel, and Spree, the Weser,
Ems, and Rhine, with its affluents the Moselle & Lippe. The canal of Bromberg connects the Vistula with the Warta, the canal of Pinow unites the Oder with the Havel, an affluent of the Elbe; and the canal of Frederick William connects the Oder with the Spree. The Rhine, which is here navigable for large vessels, and is celebrated for its picturesque beauty, separates Rhenish Prussia into two nearly equal parts, each of which has an elevated table-land and a low plain; the chief part of the table-land lies N.

of the Moselle, on l. b. of the Rhine, and is called the Eifel and the Hohe Veen, 1,600 feet in elevation. This region is of basaltic formation, intermixed with tracts of lava; it presents evident traces of volcanic action. On the rt. b. of the Rhine, the table-land forms the elevated ridge of the Taunus, mean elevation about 2,000 feet, culminating point the Feldberg 2,850 feet; this table-land extends N. between the rivers Lahn and Sieg, where it is called the Westerwald, mean elevation 1,600 feet. The coasts of the Baltic are covered with extensive lagoons, the principal of which are the Curische-Haff at the mouth of the Niemen, the Frische-Haff at the mouths of the Vistula and Pregel, and the Stettiner-Haff at the mouth of the Oder. The E. provs. are remarkable for the great number of lakes they contain; of these, Lake Spirding has an area of 20 sq. m., and Lake Maner is nearly as large. The islands of Prussia are Rügen, Usedom, and Wollin, in the Baltic. The climate of Prussia, generally temperate and salubrious, is humid and cold in the N., but in Rhenish Prussia it is warm enough for the production of excellent wine. Mean temp. of year in E. Prussia (Prussia proper), lat. 50° 30', at an elevation of 40 feet, 43°; Central Prussia, lat. 52° 30', elevation 210 feet, 48°; Rhenish Prussia, lat. 51°, elevation 250 feet, 49°.5 Fahr. Mean annual fall of rain, in the W. provs., 20 inches, decreasing towards the E. Prevailing winds W. and cold, often severe. The soil is fertile in many places, and grain is produced in sufficient quantity for the dense population, and is even exported to a considerable extent. The most fertile dists. occur along the course of the Niemen and Vistula, on l. b. of the Oder, and on the Elbe, where the vicinity of Magdeburg is so fertile that it is called the granary of Berlin. The most barren region is the Tucheler Heide, in the prov. W. Prussia, 50 m. long & 25 m. broad, which is covered with sand, interspersed with stunted shrubs. The cap. is situated in an extensive sandy plain, which is interspersed with fertile tracts, and covered in some places with fine forests. Agriculture, which forms the chief source of national wealth, is carefully conducted; the principal crops are wheat, rye, oats, barley, flax, hemp, hops, & tobacco; fruit is not widely cultivated. The vine is cultivated in Rhenish Prussia, on the banks of the Moselle & Rhine, and to a small extent in detached districts of Central and E. Prussia. The pasturage is excellent; sheep, cattle, & horses, of improved breeds, are extensively reared; and wool is an important product. Goats are numerous in the mountain dists. of Silesia and Saxony; swine in Pomerania, Saxony, and Westphalia, which last is celebrated for its hams; wild boars, stags, fallow deer, hares, and rabbits, are plentiful, as are wolves and foxes; bears are seldom met with. The lynx, beaver, badger, otter, weasel, and marten, are common, but the ermine is rare. Wild geese are extremely numerous. Bees are extensively reared, and the breeding of the silk worm has recently assumed importance. Mines of iron, copper, and lead, are worked in the provs. of Rhenish Prussia and Westphalia, & in the Harz mountains; the mountains are well wooded, and contain marble and some of the precious stones. Amber (a government monopoly) is found on the shores of the Baltic. The manufactures of Prussia are very extensive, and have recently become important; the chief branches are linens, in all the provs.; woollen cloths, and cottons, in Rhenish Prussia, at Barmen, Crefeld, and Elberfeld, silk stuffs, iron founding, carriage building, saddlery, chemical products, sugar refining, and brewing. The porcelain of Saxony, called Dresden china, is much esteemed. Commerce is very active in Prussia, and has been greatly developed by the establishment of the commercial customs union (Zollverein), by the many navigable rivers, excellent roads, and canals; and by railways, which extend from the capital in all directions [BERLIN], connected with which, are 5 great lines of telegraph extending to the chief points of the frontier. The chief exports are the productions of the soil & the manufs. of the country. Imports colonial produce, cotton, silk, tobacco, printed calicoes, silks, &c. The pop. of Prussia comprise two principal races,—I. the Germans, who form the majority,—and II. the Slavonians in the grand duchy of Posen, in Prussia proper, and in a part of Upper Silesia. The government is a hereditary monarchy; the authority of the king is absolute, but modified by provincial estates, and further by a constitution, granted 1847. Calvinism is the religion of the royal family, and of the majority of the people, but all sects are tolerated. The proportion of Protestants to Roman Catholics is as 5 to 3; Jews amount to 206,500. Public instruction is more developed in Prussia than in any other country of Europe: except Saxony, it possesses the celebrated universities of Berlin, Halle, and Bonn, besides those of Breslau, Griefswalde, and Königsberg; and numerous literary and learned societies. The system of education established by the government, is of a thoroughly practical nature, and is considered the most complete and efficient in Europe. The different classes of schools are —I. the elementary school, at which the great majority of the people receive their education. —II. the city school, which is always attached to a gymnasium.—III. the gymnasium, in which Latin and Greek are taught. In most of the small towns are normal schools for the training of teachers. The universities are all under the control of the government. In 1843, there were in all 25,597 schools in Prussia, of which 23,646 were elementary schools. Attendance at school is compulsory. In the middle of the 13th cent., the Teutonic knights subjugated E. Prussia, and converted the people to christianity. Albert of Brandenburg, grand master of the order, appropriated the country in 1525, his family augmented these possessions; and Frederick, one of his descendants obtained the title of King in 1701, he acquired the principality of Neuchâtel in Switzerland. By the treaty of Utrecht, William I. obtained a portion of the duchy of Gelders, he acquired the duchy of Limburg, and took from Sweden the greater part of Pomerania. Frederick II. (the Great) conquered Silesia, which was abandoned by Austria in 1742; this king and his successor took part in the dismemberment of Poland, and thus acquired the grand duchy of Posen. By the treaty of Tilsit in 1807, Prussia was deprived of all her possessions between the Rhine and the Elbe, and the greater part of Prussian Poland; but in 1815, after the fall of Napoleon, the Congress of Vienna restored all these estates, except a part of Poland, and at the same time granted to Prussia a part of Saxony, and the duchy of the Lower Rhine.

Military service for 3 years is imperative on all the male pop., who subsequently form the Landwehr, the 1st battalion of which is composed of men from 25 to 32, and the 2d, men from 32 to 39 years of age. The landsturm comprises all others capable of bearing arms between the ages of 17 and 50. In 1849, the standing army was 137,000: the men capable of bearing arms 837,000. Prussia has no navy, but the mercantile marine under the direction of the Seehandlung Institute is under the control of the government. Public rev. (1849) 88,566,380 dollars. Public debt with interest 1st Jan. 1849, 162,861,444 dollars.

PUNJAB, an extensive territory of N.W. Hindostan, embracing the country watered by the "five great waters," of which the Indus is the most westerly and the Sutleje the most easterly. The outline of the district is angular, the apex being at the point where the Indus and the Punjnd meet, in lat. 28° 55' N., lon. 70° 28' E.

The N. is an elevated region, formed by the Bolor, Tibet, and W. Himalaya mtns., and from whence issue six rivers which flow S.wards through a level and low lying region. The rivers are the Indus, Jhylum, Chenab, Ravee, Beas, and Sutleje. Length from N.E. to S.W., from Nobra in Ladakh to the confluence of the Indus and Punjnd, about 600 m. Breadth from Rampur to Derbend, 350 m. Pop. estimated at 4,740,000, consisting of Sikhs, Cashmerians, and Afghans. The N. part of the state is a range of mtns., with elevation from 20,000 to 27,000 ft. The W. range, enclosing the valley of the Indus, is of granite and primary rocks. The Rupshu Spiti and adjacent part of Ladakh, are of secondary strata, with organic remains; the E. Cashmerian are volcanic and basaltic, with limestones. S. of lat. 34°, the country rapidly slopes to the alluvial plain of the Punjab, which extends for several hundred m. without any considerable eminence except the salt ranges at the base of the Himalaya, which contain immense beds of rock-salt, as also alum, sulphur, nitre, coal, and gypsum. The great plain is divided by the intersections of its rivers into 5 daabs. The soil in general is sandy and barren, but with many fertile spots intermixed, and there are abundant means of irrigation. Summer temp. of the plains excessively hot and dry; winter cool, and not unfrequently frost. Temp. at Lahore in June, in the shade, 112° Fahr. The vegetation of the Punjab resembles that of E. India. The sugarcane, palm, orange, and other fruit-trees flourish, and all kinds of grain crops are raised, as also opium, indigo, tobacco. Camels, buffaloes, horses, are reared in the extensive pasture lands, but rural industry is by no means generally practised. Silk and cotton fabrics are manufactured in the towns, as also carpets, shawls, and warlike arms. A considerable transit trade is carried on in goods imported from eastern India and carried westward; bullion, silk, drugs, and dyes being received in return. The population is of a mixed kind. In the N. are Tibetan Mongolians, and the remains of former Afghan conquerors are scattered over the whole country; the great majority of the people are Punjab Jats, descendants of Hindoo Rajpoot Jats; the Khalsa Sikh pop. may amount to 500,000. Their religion, originally supposed to have been a pure deism, is now a modification of Hindooism; they have no castes, and the military profession is open to all. Their morals are depraved and sensual. In person the Sikhs resemble the Hindoos, but are of more robust and active habits than the natives of Middle India, and they excel in warlike enterprise. The Sikh gov., a military despotism, extended over the whole of the Punjab, Kashmir, Ladakh, and Bulh, Peshawer W. of the Indus, and the Derajat as far S. as the frontier of Scinde. The rev. was formerly estimated at about 2½ millions ster. annually. Runjeet Singh had an army of 75,000 men. Principal towns, Lahore the cap., Amritzir, Serinagur, Mooltan, Peshawer, Jullundur, Jelalpoor. The Punjab was the scene of Alexander the Great's oriental conquests. At the beginning of the 10th century, it was overrun by Mahommed of Ghuznee "the destroyer;" subsequently it was conquered by the Afghans, and in 1526 by Baber the Mogul conqueror. Under the late Runjeet Singh, the power and boundaries of the kingdom were greatly extended; on his death in 1839 and the subsequent massacres of his nearest heirs, the country became the scene of anarchy. An unprovoked invasion of the British territories E.

of the Suteje by a powerful army of the Sikhs in 1845, led to a series of British victories at Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Aliwal, and Sabraon, and their submission by treaty in 1846. This treaty was again broken by Shere Singh in 1848, and the Sikh force was finally defeated and dispersed at Goojerat, 21st Feb. 1849. PYRENEES, Pyrenæi Montes, an extensive mntn. chain of Europe, forming the limit between France and Spain, and extending in a direction S.S.E. to N.N.W. from Cape Creux on the Mediterranean in the E. to near Fuenterrabia on the W., a distance of 270 m., with a breadth of from 50 to 100 m.; they are joined on the W. by the Cantabrian mntns., which may be considered a prolongation of the chain. Next to the Alps, the Pyrenees are in general the highest mntns. of Europe; the summit of the chain forms a curved line with a mean altitude of 7,990 ft. The slope is much more gentle on the N. than on the S. side. On the N. side they send off numerous off-sets which cover parts of the French depts., & the descent is more gradual at the W. than at the E. extremity. The primary formation is less extensive than in the Alps; it consists of granite, micaceous schist, and primitive limestone, which form a continuous band stretching three-fourths across the isthmus. The bulk of the system is composed of secondary rocks which are arranged in vertical bands flanking the older rocks, and consist of clay-slate, grauwacké, and blue limestone. The oolite and chalk formations occur on the lower part of the chain. Snow lies deep in the mountains during a great part of the year, and is perpetual on the higher points. The elevation of the snow line is 8,000 ft. From the Marbore to Maladetta, the summits are covered with broad bands of ice, yet no true glaciers have been discovered. Corn grows in some of the upper valleys, maize is cultivated at the vill. of Lescar (Lower Pyrenees) at an elevation of 3,280 ft., and the pine tree grows at 10,870 ft. above the sea. The bear is found in the high desert regions near the snow line, and the lynx ascends to 3,800 feet. The principal summits are Pic Nethou (Maladetta), 11,168 ft.; Mont Perdu, 10,950 ft.; the Vignemale, 10,820 ft.; Pic du Midi, 9,540 ft.; and Le Canigou, 9,137 ft. The principal passes of the Pyrenees are, from E. to W., Port d'Oo, 9,843 ft.; the Breche de Roland, 9,500 ft.; Estaubé, 8,402 ft.; Tourmalet, 7,143 ft.; Gavarnie, 7,654 ft., above the level of the sea; there are about 50 in all, of which the following are fit for carriages:—I. The Col de Pertus, between Perpignan and Jonquera, passable at all seasons.—II. The pass of Puymoriens between the valley of Segre and that of the Ariège.—III. The Port de Confranc, between Zaragoza and Pau.—IV. The Port of Roncevaux, between Pamplona and St

Jean.—V. The pass of the Bidassao, between Victoria and Bayonne. The chief rivers rising in the Pyrenees, are the Adour, Garonne, and Aude, flowing N., and the Llobregat and numerous affls. of the Ebro flowing S. The Pyrenees contain iron-ores; copper and argentiferous lead-ore were formerly worked, but are now abandoned. Several of the streams are auriferous, but no gold or silver mines are worked. The valley of Cardona contains a remarkable deposit of rock-salt, one of the beds measuring 390 by 750 feet. The Pyrenees give their name to 3 depts. of France.—I. Basses (or lower) Pyrenées, a frontier prov. formed of part of the old prov. Bearn, bounded E. by the dep. H. Pyrenees, S. by the Pyrenees, W. by the Bay of Biscay, on which are the ports of Bayonne and St Jean-de-Luz, and N. by the depts. Landes and Gers. Area 2,928 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 457,832.—Cap. Pau.—Nearly half the surface is covered with pastures and marshes, one-sixth part is occupied by fine forests and the rest is fertile. Numerous torrents descend from the mountains, the chief of which are the Gave-de-Pau, Gave d'Oleron, and the Nive. Minerals comprise iron, copper, and marble. The mineral springs of Eau-Bonnes and Eau-Chaudes are well frequented, and the salt from the springs of Salies is in repute. Among vegetable products are the oak, gall-nut, lint, and wine; and among animals, the bear, isard, a species of chamois. Manufs. unimportant; the chief are iron forging, manufs. of linen and paper. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Bayonne, Mauleon, Oloron, Orthes, and Pau.—II. Hautes (or upper) Pyrenées, a frontier dep. S.E. of the former, composed of part of the old prov. Gascogne, having E. the dep. H. Garonne, and N. Gers. Area 1,800 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 251,285. Surface covered by the ramifications of the Pyrenees enclosing the fine valleys of Adour, Campan, Barrèges, Cauterets, and Azun. The Adour, and its affls. the Arros and Gave-de-Pau, rise in the dep., the soil contains numerous minerals, but only marble is quarried. The mineral springs of Bagnères, Barrèges, and Cauterets are much frequented. Soil fertile in the valleys, but grain is insufficient for the wants of the population. Wine is abundant and of good quality. Cattle are extensively reared, horses are excellent, and the sheep are protected from the wolves by the powerful dogs of the Pyrenees. The chief manufs. are those of woollen stuffs called Barreges. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Argeles, Bagnères, and Tarbes.—III. Pyrenees Orientales, is separated from the former by the dep. Ariège, and bounded E. by the Mediterranean, N. by the dep. Aude, and comprised in the old prov. Roussillon and part of Languedoc. Area 1,593 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 180,794. The Pyrenees on the S. separate the dep. from Spain and connect it with their centres; the highest point in the dep. is Canigon 9,137 ft. Chief rivers the Tet, Gly, and Aude, flowing E. to the Mediterranean, the Ariège affl. of the Garonne, and the Segre affl. of the Ebro. On the coast are the marshes of Leucate and St Nazaire, and the ports Collioure, Port Vendres, Bagnols, and Nouvelle. The soil contains iron, antimony, fine marble, and mineral springs. Climate cold in the mntns., but sufficiently mild in the valleys for the culture of the pomegranate and the mulberry. The orange grows here on espaliers. The wines of Roussillon are esteemed. Manufs. are unimportant. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Ceret, Perpignan, and Prades.—The Australian Pyrenees is a name given to a range in the colony of Victoria, between the Austrian Alps and Grampians, their principal summits being Mts. Cole, Byng, and Campbell.

America, in its upper part called the Escaravendra, rises at the base of the Rocky Mtns., near Santa Fé, Mexico; flows at first E., forming the limit between Texas and the Ozark, and Arkansas territories, & then S.E. through Louisiana, and joins the Mississippi 128 m. N.W. New Orleans. Total course estim. at 1,500 m. On it are the towns Alexandria and Natchitoches. About 100 m. above the latter commences the raft, where, by vast collections of fallen timber, the river is expanded to a breadth of 20 or 30 m., for 60 or 70 m. of its course, and divided into numerous channels. The U. States government have, at a great expense, removed the timber in various places, & rendered the riv. navigable for steam-boats for 400 m. from its mouth. Affs., the Washita & False-Washita. — Red River Settlement, British North America, Hudson Bay territory, on the confines of the United States, between Lakes Superior and Winnipeg, was founded by the Earl of Selkirk in 1813. It is connected with Hayle by the West Cornwall railway.

RED SEA, or ARABIAN GULF, an inland sea between Africa and Asia (Arabia), lat. 12° 40' to 30° N., lon. 32° 30' to 43° 30' E. Length, N.W. to S.E., upwards of 1,400 m.; breadth varies to nearly 200 m. At its S. extremity it communicates with the Indian Ocean by the Strait Babel-Mandeb. In its N. part it bifurcates into the Gulfs of Suez and Akabah, which enclose the peninsula of Sinai. Depth varies, average about 100 fathoms. It abounds with islands & coral reefs, and is supposed by some to have derived its name from the large quantities of red coral & pink-coloured fuci which it yields; while it is more probably derived from the anc. Idumea, "sea of Edom," or "red sea." The country almost everywhere around it is mntnous. The S.E. monsoon blows constantly for 8 months of the year, and during the remainder, the N.W. monsoon. From Oct. to May, when S. winds prevail, the water rises in the N. part of the sea, which then attains an elev. much higher than the Mediterranean. The navigation is difficult owing to sudden changes of wind and heavy gales. Principal ports are Mocha, Hodeida, Loheia, Jiddah, and Yembo on the Arabian side, and Suez, Kosseib, Suakin, and Massowah on the Egyptian, Nubian, & Danakil coasts. The Jews and Phœnicians appear to have carried on an extensive trade upon this sea, and after the destruction of the Persian empire, it resumed importance as the principal route of traffic between Europe and the East, which distinction it retained until the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope. It has again recovered some of its anc. consequence, as part of the direct routs between Europe & India. [ADEN, BAB-EL-MANDEB.]

RHINE (German Rhein, anc. Rhenus), an important and celebrated riv. of Europe, is formed in Switzerland by the union of two small streams, the Hintere Rhein; the first springs from the glacier of Rheinwald, and the second rises on the N. side of Mount St Gothard at a height of 7,650 ft.; these meet at Reichenan in the cant. Grisons. The united stream flows generally N. past Meyenfeld, and enters the lake of Constance on the S.E. near Rheineck; at Stein it quits the lake at its W. extremity, flows W. past Schaffhausen, and Laufenburg, separating Switzerland from Bavaria. At Basle, where the Upper Rhine terminates with an elevation of 755 feet and a breadth of 550 feet, it turns to the N., and flows past Breisach and Strasbourg, Speyer, and Mannheim, where its bed is 300 feet above the sea, between the territories of Baden on the E., and France and Rhenish Bavaria on the W. From Worms to Mayence, it traverses the Hessen territories. At Mayence it receives the Main, & flows W. to Bingen, where it turns to the N.W., passing Coblenz, Bonn, Cologne, and Düsseldorf (near which it attains its greatest breadth 2,300 feet), Wesel & Emmerich, where its course is again westerly, till entering the Netherlands it reaches the N. sea by several branches, having a delta larger than that of any other European river. [NETHERLANDS.] The principal affls. of the Rhine are on right, the Kinzig, Neckar, Main, Lahn, Ruhr, Lippe; and on left, the Thur, Aar, Ille, and Moselle. From Chur to Basle, the Rhine is only partially navigable, on account of the rapidity of its current, the numerous rocks which impede it, and its waterfalls, the greatest of which is at Laufen near Schaffhausen, where it falls 80 feet. From Basle to the sea, the navigation for steamers and large barges is continuous. In the Netherlands it is connected by canals with its several branches & with the sea. The great N. canal unites it to the Meuse and the Nèthe, affs. of the Scheldt; & the canal of the Rhône and Rhine in France connects it with the Rhône by the Saône. In Bavaria it communicates with the Danube by means of the Main, and the Altmühl and Ludwigs canal. The direct distance of the Rhine from its source to its mouth is 360 m.; following its windings it is about 600 m., and its basin comprises an area of 65,280 sq. m. The Rhine gives name to 3 circles of Baden, to a prov. of Hessen Darmstadt, a prov. of Bavaria, 2 depts. of France, and a prov. of Prussia. Rhine Confederation. [GERMANY.]

RHONA, an island of Egypt, in the Nile, immed. opposite Cairo, 2 m. in length. It contains the Pacha's gardens, in which the teak and other timber trees are acclimated, pleasure-grounds open to the public, a powder magazine, and the famous ancient Nilometer.

RHODE ISLAND, the smallest of the U. S. of N. Amer., in the N. part of the Union, between lat. 41° 18' & 42° 1' N., and lon. 71° 6' & 71° 55' W., having S. the Atlantic, W. Connecticut, and on other sides Massachusetts. Area 1,360 sq. m. Pop. 108,830. It derives its name from Rhode island in Narraganset bay, 17 m. in length by 3 m. in width, besides which it comprises some other islands in the Atlantic. Surface hilly in N., elsewhere level or undulating. Principal riv. the Pawtucket. Soil better adapted for grazing than tillage. Scarcely sufficient corn is raised for home consumption. Principal exports are flax, seed, cattle, beef, pork, and cotton goods. Manufs. of cottons, woollens, iron goods, leather, & paper, are important. Total length of railways 47½ m. Value of imports (1844) 269,437 dollars, do. of exports 260,777 dollars. Public rev. (1848) 78,200 dollars. It has no public debt. Until lately, it was governed by an anc. royal charter; but a constitution was formed in 1842. It sends 2 representatives to Congress. Principal towns Providence and Newport, alternately the caps., Bristol, Warwick, and Coventry.

RHODEN, a town of Central Germany, Princip. Waldeck, 24 m. W.N.W. Cassel. Pop. 1,839.

RHODES, an island of Asiatic Turkey, in the Mediterranean, off the S.W. coast of Asia Minor, between lat. 35° 53' and 36° 28' N., and lon. 27° 40' & 28° 12' E. Length 46 m.; greatest breadth 18 m. Area 420 sq. m. Pop. estim. at 30,000, of whom about 8,000 are Turks, 3,000 Jews, and the remainder Greeks, with a few Franks. It is traversed by a mtn. chain, covered with forests, which have long supplied good timber for ship-building. Its valleys are well-watered, and of high fertility. Principal exports—wax, honey, figs, oranges, lemons, pomegranates, wine, valonea bark, onions, and manufactured silk; in addition to which, sponge, timber, shoes, and red-leather, are among its products. Principal imports—colonial produce, American cotton, German woollens, iron, nails, shot, tin, paper, soap, salt-fish, cordage, glass and earthenwares, hardware and cutlery, and French fancy articles, principally by way of Smyrna and Syra, & coals direct from England, for the supply of the Mediterranean steam-packets, and horses, mules, cattle, sheep, poultry, hides, skins, wool, carpets, and corn, from the opposite coast of Asia Minor. In the year from July 1840 to July 1841, 1,360 vessels are registered as having arrived in the island for commercial purposes. Rhodes is governed by a pasha, immediately subordinate to the capitan pasha, & whose jurisdiction extends over the Turkish Sporades, and the naval station Marmorice.

RHODES, a strongly fortified city and seaport of Asiatic Turkey, cap. of the island Rhodes, at its N.E. extremity, 13 m. S.E. the nearest promontory of Asia Minor. Lat. of mole 36° 26' 9" N., lon. 28° 13' E. Pop. about 15,000, of whom 8,000 are Turks, and 3,000 Jews. It is enclosed by walls, built by the knights of St John, and on the land side it is strengthened by ravelins and a moat. On the N.E. side two piers project to enclose a harbour, having in its centre from 16 to 18 feet water, and on its N. side is another port of nearly equal depth. The city has 9 large and 24 small mosques, a Jews' quarter, and several synagogues, the ancient hospital of the knights, now used as a barrack, an armoury, and upwards of 10,000 houses, many of which are untenanted. Outside of the walls, on the N., are the pasha's palace, the dockyard, and a Roman Catholic quarter, with a chapel and school. S. of the city are the Greek suburbs, with about 3,000 inhabitants, and 9 or 10 churches. On the adjacent heights are many scattered villas. Rhodes has 3 Mohammedan colleges, a Turkish library of 1,000 vols., various Turkish & Greek schools, and some brisk manufs. of red leather, and shoes for exportation. It is the residence of a Greek consul, and French vice-consul, and several vice-consular agents. In antiquity it was one of the most celebrated of Greek cities, and it boasted of the famous brazen Colossus—one of the seven wonders of the world—which stood at the entrance of its harbour. After the destruction of its republic, it belonged successively to the Romans, the Greek emperors, the Genoese, and the knights of St John of Jerusalem; which last held it from 1308 to 1522, when after a heroic resistance, it capitulated to the Turks under Solyman the Magnificent.

Soil rich in mines of copper, iron, and coal. It produces excellent wine, the most esteemed of which is that of Côte-Rotie, Condrieux, and Beaujolais. The goat milk cheese of Mont d'Or is in high repute. This is one of the most industrious depts. of France. The silks of Lyon are sent to all parts of the world, and an immense quantity of muslins are manufactured at Tarare. The other branches of industry comprise cotton and linen spinning and weaving, hat making, glass and paper making. The railway from Lyon to St Etienne was one of the first constructed in France. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Lyon and Villefranche.

RHONE (BOUCHES DU). [BOUCHES-DU-RHONE.]

RHONE, Rhodanus, an important river of Europe, rises in Switzerland, in the Rhone Glacier, on the W. of Mount S. Gothard, betw. mnts. Furka and Grimsel, at an elevation of 5,500 feet, flows S.W. past Brieg and Sion to Martigny, where it turns sharply to the N.W., and enters the Lake of Geneva near its S.E. extremity. At Geneva, it leaves the S.W. part of the lake. It enters France through the Jura mountains, and flows S. past Seyssel, where it becomes navigable; its course is now tortuously W. to Lyon, where it receives the Saône, and it then flows nearly due S. past St Genis, where its bed is 640 feet above the sea, Vienne, Tonnon, Valence, Avignon, Beaucaire, to Arles, where it separates into several branches, forming a delta called the Ile de la Camargue, and enters the Gulf of Lion, Mediterranean. Principal affls., on right, the Ain, Saône, Ardeche, and Gard, on left, the Isere, Drome, and Durance. Its fall is much greater than that of the Rhine, and consequently its navigation is difficult and dangerous. It is connected with the Loire by means of the Saône and the canal du Centre; the canal of Burgundy unites it to the Yonne and Seine, and that of the Rhone and Rhine connects it with the Rhine. Distance from source to mouth 285 m., following windings 645 m., extent of basin 30,000 sq. m. The Rhone formerly disappeared at a place called the Perte du Rhône, on the frontier of France, but the rock which covered it has been removed.

RIO BRANCO, or PABIMA, a river of Brazil, prov. Pará, rises near the source of the Orinoco, lat. 3° N., lon. 64° W.; runs at first E. to its junction with the Takutu, & thence flows mostly S.S.W. to the Rio Negro, which it joins as its principal affluent by several mouths, 70 m. S.E. Barcellos. Ttal course 700 m. Principal tribu- taries, the Itacutu or Takutu, Macajubi, and Catremani. In lat. 1° 45' N. its navigation is impeded by a series of falls and rapids, formed by ledges of granite rock. The aggregate per- pendicular descent of these throughout 7 m. is estimated at 60 feet, and at the largest—the Caruwanna—canoes must be unloaded. Its waters are opaque and whitish (whence its name). On it are fort St Joaquim, and the towns Carmo and Santa Maria Nova.—The upper part of the riv. San Miguel, Brazil, has the same name.

RIO DAS MORTES, a riv. of Brazil, prov. Matto Grosso, joins the Araguay : course N. & E. 500 m.

RIO BRAVO DEL NORTE. [RIO GRANDE.]

RIO-DE-JANEIRO, the metropolitan prov. of Brazil, between lat. 21° 23' and 23° 20' S., and lon.

40° 53' and 44° 40' W., having E. and S. the At- lantic, and landward the provs. San Paulo, Minas

Geraes, and Espiritu-Santo. Estimated area 16,960 sq. m. Pop. exclusive of the cap. (1840)

430,000, of whom 224,850 were slaves. Surface low along the coast, but the interior is mostly nutnous, consisting of the Serra do Mar, Organ mnts. and their ramifications. Principal river, the Paraíba, which forms a part of the N. frontier. Soil extremely fertile; products comprise sugar, coffee, cacao, cotton, maize, rice, indigo, and fine woods. After the cap. Rio, the principal towns are Villa-de-Cabo, Cantagallo, St Joao-da-Praia, and Lorena.

RIO-DE-JANEIRO, the cap. of the Empire of Brazil, and of the prov. Rio, the most important commercial city of S. Amer., is situated on an elevated tongue of land, on the W. side of a vast bay. Lat. of fort Vilagagnan,  $22^{\circ} 54' 7''$  S., lon.  $43^{\circ} 9'$  W. Pop. (1843) 170,000, comprising Brazilians 60,000, foreigners 25,000, slaves 85,000. Mean temp. of year  $73^{\circ} .7$ ; winter  $68^{\circ} .5$ ; summer  $79^{\circ}$ , Fahr. Its port, which is large and deep, is defended by a castle. Rio consists of an old and a new town, the latter of which dates from 1808, and is separated from the former by an open space called the Campo do Honra: it extends on uneven ground, along the side of the bay. Streets generally straight, but narrow and ill-paved. Many of the houses are built of granite, and it has some handsome squares and monuments. Its general aspect is that of an European city, but it is unfortunately so placed as to be deprived of the benefit of the land breeze, by a range of mnts., and is exposed to suffocating heat, relieved only by the sea breeze in the middle of the day. The city is supplied with water by means of a magnificent aqueduct, which traverses a deep valley 7 m. in length, and has numerous public fountains. The environs of Rio are celebrated for picturesque beauty, and are provided with excellent promenades. The churches, of which there are upwards of 50, have no external elegance, but are mostly richly decorated in the interior. The chief public edifices are the Imperial palace, a plain brick building, the old palace on the shore, used for public offices, the naval and military arsenal greatly extended in 1843, and a vast public hospital, erected in 1841. Its educational establishments are the Imperial college of Don Pedro II., the college of St José, schools of medicine & surgery, military and naval academy, and many public schools. The national library has 80,000 printed vols., and valuable MSS. Rio is the see of a bishop, the residence of a governor, and the seat of an electoral college, which had, in 1844, 256 electors; it has many scientific establishments, a museum of natural history rich in ornithology and mineralogy, a magnificent alcaza or theatre, and a fine public botanic garden. From its position, Rio is naturally the great mart of Brazil, and especially of the provs. Minas Geraes, St Paul and Goyaz, and its advantages are such as to fit it for concentrating the commerce of the globe. Its imports comprise the products of every country; its chief exports are cotton, sugar, coffee, rum, building timber, leather, tallow, gold, diamonds, topazes, amethysts, and aquamarine. From official documents it appears that in 1843, there were in Rio 4,734 mercantile houses, of which 328 were French, 95 English, 7 Belgian, and the rest Portuguese.—The bay, or inlet of Rio, 17 m. in length and 11 m. in extreme width, forms one of the noblest harbours in the world. Its entrance, 2 m. S. of the city, is  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. wide between fort Sta. Cruz on the E., & a fort on the snar loaf rock on the W. The bay contains many small isls., the largest of which is Ilha do Governador, 6 m. in length. Upwards of 60,000 slaves are calculated to have been imp. into Rio in 1847.

At its mouth is a bar with less than 6 feet water. Banks skirted by abrupt wooded heights, rising to 300 feet in height. The Upper Rio Dulce enters the Gulf from the W.

RIO GRANDE, a river of W. Africa, Senegambia, rises in Futa Jallon, near Laby, lat.  $11^{\circ} 20'$  N., lon.  $11^{\circ}$  W., flows W. and enters the Atlantic by an estuary 10 m. across, between the Nuñez and Casamanza rivers. On it are the towns Kade, Jeba, and Bissao, and opposite its mouth are the Bissagos islands. The whole country between it and the Nuñez is supposed to be a collection of islands, divided by its branches, many of which remain unexplored. Its banks are densely wooded, and studded with immense ant hills, the country watered by it is populous, and produces gold, ivory, wax, hides, & horses.—II. a riv. of S. Amer., Bolivia, rises by sev. heads near Cochabamba, flows E. & N., separating the depts. Cochabamba and Santa Cruz from those of Oruro and Sucre, &c., and near lat.  $15^{\circ} 10'$  S. receives the Chapare, after which it is called the Mamore. Affls. the Chaolani, Piray, and Yapacani.—III. a river, New Granada, dep. Isthmus, rises N.W. Panama, about 2 m. from which city it enters the Pacific Ocean. It receives several streams, is navigable for the last 5 m. of its course, and admits the entrance of large vessels at high water. Its head is near the Obispo, an affl. of the Cruces.—IV. a riv., Mexican confed., depts. Queretaro, Gnanaxuato, Mechoacan, and Xalisco, enters the Pacific at San Blas, after a N.W. course of 400 m. across the Anahuac table land. It is greatly interrupted by cataracts, and is very rapid. Affls. the Lerma, &c. It traverses a part of the Lake of Chapala.—V. a river of the Mosquito territory, Central Amer., enters the Caribbean Sea, 30 m. N. Pearl Key lagoon, and is said to be navigable for boats for 200 m.—VI. a name of the river MOTAOGA.

RIO GRANDE (OR RIO BRAVO) DEL NORTE, a riv. of N. Amer., rises in the mountainous region, lat.  $41^{\circ}$  N., lon.  $110^{\circ}$  W., flows mostly S.S.E., forming the boundary between the U. S. Mexican territory and Texas, and enters the Gulf of Mexico at El Refugio. Lat.  $25^{\circ} 56'$  N., lon.  $97^{\circ} 12'$  W. Total course 1,600 to 1,800 m. Principal affls. the Puerco and Conches. Its navigation is impeded by rapids and by shoals for more than 100 m. below Santa Fé; at its mouth is a bar which has often not more than 3 feet water.

RIO GRANDE DO NORTE, a marit. prov. of Brazil, between lat.  $4^{\circ} 32'$  and  $7^{\circ} 18'$  S., and lon.  $35^{\circ}$  and  $38^{\circ} 40'$  W., having N. and E. the Atlantic, W. the provs. Ceara, and S. Parahiba. Area 31,230 sq. m. Pop. 100,000. Its name is derived from a river which, after an E. course, enters the Atlantic at Natal. Other rivers are the Serido and Appody. Surface level near the coast, uneven inland. Products the best Brazil wood, cotton, sugar, ricc, drugs, salt, and large numbers of cattle. Besides Natal, the cap., it contains the towns Villa Flor, Arez, Anacu, Portalegre, Villa Nova de Princeza, and Villa Nova do Principe. During five years the number of slaves has risen in this prov. from 5,000 to 15,000.

RIO GRANDE DO SUL, a town of Brazil, prov. S. Pedro do Rio Grande, on a low peninsula at the S. extremity of Lake Patos, with a light house in lat. 32° 7' 00" S., lon. 52° 8' 00" W. ROME (Ital. Roma), a city of Italy, cap. of the Pontif. Sta., and formerly the metropolis of the greater part of the world known to the ancients, is situated on the Tiber, 17 m. N.E. its mouth in the Mediterranean. Lat. of St Peter's 41° 54' 6" N., lon. 12° 27' 14" E.; elev. of site above the sea, St Peter's 95 ft., the Roman college 193 ft. Pop. (1833) 170,701; (1846) 180,000, including 18,650 foreigners. The city is built on marshy ground, at the foot of a range of low hills, and is separated by the Tiber into 2 unequal portions, which are divided into 14 Rioni (regions or districts), of these 12 are in Rome proper, or the space on the E. or l. b. of the river, and only 2 on the W. or r. b., called the Leonine city, or Trastevere, containing the Vatican and the Castle of St Angelo. Its walls are 15 miles in circumference, and are pierced for 18 gates, 6 of which are built up,—the finest are the Porta del Popolo on the N., and the Porta San Giovanni on the S. of the city. Little more than one-third of the space within the walls is inhabited, most of the space S. of the capitol being used as gardens and vineyards. The most populous part of the modern city occupies the site of the ancient Camp Martius, a plain extending between the Capitoline, Quirinal, and Pincian hills. The Tiber within the walls, has a winding course of 3 miles. It is navigable only for small provision boats after heavy rains it frequently rises 20 or 30 feet and inundates a great part of the city. Near the middle of its course the Tiber forms an island called S. Bartolomeo, 900 feet long and 300 feet broad, connected with the mainland by 2 bridges besides which, the only others are the Ponto Sisi and the Ponto S. Angelo, the latter connect the city with the castle of St. Angelo, the citadel of Rome, which serves for a state prison and house of correction. The 3 principal thoroughfares of Rome diverge from the Piazza del Popolo, a large square at its N. extremity; the central of these, the Corso, extends in a direct line S.S.E. for about a mile. There are in all 60 streets, 275 lanes, and 148 squares, of all dimensions; most of these are ornamented with rich sculptured fountains, of which there are in Rome 150. These are supplied with excellent water by 3 aqueducts; the finest is called Aqua Vergina—the others are Aqua Felice and Aqua Paola. Notwithstanding its architectural and artistic riches, modern Rome has a sad and desolate aspect. Most of the streets are narrow, dirty, and unpaved; in these the finest palaces and the most wretched hovels are often seen side by side. Near the Capitoline Mount is the Ghetto a Jews' quarter, a crowded, filthy space, enclosed by walls, the 2 gates of which are under charge of the police. The situation of Rome is unhealthy especially in summer, from the effects of malaria but, from the mildness of its winter climate, it is a favourite resort for invalids. The mean temp. of the year is 50°.4; winter 46°.7; summer 74°. Fahr. Frost seldom lasts over the night, and snow falls on an average 1½ days in the year but, in the severe season of 1812, the ponds were frozen over for several days.

Rome has 364 churches, most of which are remarkable for their architecture and their decorations, of these the cathedral of St Peter's is the largest and most sumptuous in Christendom. It was begun under Pope Julius II. in 1506, on the site of an old church of same name; it was planned and commenced by Bramante, but altered and carried on by Raphael, and Michael Angelo Buonarroti. It was dedicated 18th November 1626. Length of the cathedral 514 feet, width 286 feet, height to top of cross 433 feet, being 7 feet higher than St Paul's, London, and 33 feet lower than the cathedral at Strasbourg. The church of St John Lateran in which the Popes were crowned, is the mother church of Rome, contains the gorgeous Corsini chapel. The church of St Peter in Vincoli is regarded as the most ancient church in Rome. The Vatican adjoining St Peter's, is the largest palace in Europe, but irregular in its plan and not remarkable for its architecture; it is said to contain 4,422 halls, chapels, and other apartments; became the permanent residence of the Pope after their return from Avignon in 1377. The galleries and halls, and the Sistine chapel, decorated by Raphael and Michael Angelo, contain the most choice paintings & statues, including a portion of those carried off by the French, which were restored in 1815. Two of its vast galleries contain the famous library of the Vatican, which is estimated to comprise 100,000 printed books, 25,000 MSS., of which 2,300 are oriental. One of its museums contains the Apollo Belvidere and the Laocoon. The superb palace of the Quirinal, or palace of Monte Cavallo, long the usual summer residence of the Pope, is surrounded by extensive gardens; attached to this is the palace called the Dataria Apostolica, whence the pontif. bulls were issued. In the square of the Quirinal is the palace of the Consulta, seat of the supreme tribunal. The palace of Salvatori contains the archives of Rome. In the Campidoglio or modern capitol, forming 3 sides of a square, are the palace of the senator of Rome, that of the conservatori, the Capitoline museum, rich in objects of art and antiquities, and the university; between these is placed the famous bronze statue of Marcus Aurelius. There are upwards of 60 splendid private palaces, the finest of these are the Barberini palace, the Doria palace, remarkable for its extent and its gallery of paintings, the Colonna palace for its gardens, the Rospigliosi and Farnese palaces, the latter celebrated for its architecture, the palace of Prince Canino for its Etruscan museum. The palaces called Villas, though mostly within the limits of the city, are situated amidst orange and citron groves, they are ornamented with fountains and statues; the most magnificent of these is the V. Borghese, on the Pincian hill, outside of the Porta del Popolo; the Villa Medici, formerly celebrated for its Venus, now a school of design for young French artists, and that of prince Ludovisi. Of the many scientific and literary establishments, the university of Rome has the first rank as one of the principal in Italy, and one of the oldest in Europe. In 1841, it was attended by 680 students. The chief of the others are the Roman college founded by the Jesuits, with a rich library and museums of natural history and antiquities; the college of the Propaganda, in which natives of India, Abyssinia, Armenia, and Greece are instructed, and to which a celebrated printing establishment is attached. There are English, Irish, Scotch, and 17 other colleges. In the institution of the Ripa Grande 1,000 children are instructed in arts and trades; and there are numerous schools of painting, sculpture, and architecture. The principal academies are, that called d'Arcadia, one of the oldest & most celebrated in Europe, the academy of natural history, with an observatory, and the academies of theology, archæology, the Tiberina, and others. Next to the library of the Vatican, the chief public libraries are the Casanatense in the convent of Minerva, with 120,000 vols., the Angelica library with 84,820 printed vols., and 2,945 MSS. Besides the museums of the Vatican and the Capitol, the public collections comprise museums of anatomy, natural history, mineralogy, antiquities, and mosaics, and there are numerous & valuable private collections. Rome has at present 8 theatres, the finest of which is that of Apollo on the Tiber, near the bridge of St Angelo; a deaf-dumb institution, and numerous hospitals and benevolent institutions, orphan hospitals, and houses of industry, the chief of which are the hospitals of the Holy Trinity, St Louis & St Michael:—in that of S. Sisto 300 poor are clothed and fed. The chief industry of the inhabitants of Rome is connected with the production of articles of virtù, and the supply of the numerous artists, invalids, and other visitors; its few manufs. are confined to woollen and silk fabrics, hats, gloves, parchment, strings for musical instruments, artificial feathers, false pearls, mosaics, jewellery and trinkets. Many of the pop. are occupied in attendance on the ecclesiastical courts. In 1846, there were in Rome 32 cardinals, 29 bishops, 124 prelates, 1,738 secular clergy, 2,488 regular clergy, and 1,743 nuns. The noble remains of ancient Rome comprise the Pontus Ælius, now the bridge of St Angelo, the Cloaca Maxima, a great subterranean tunnel still in good repair, the aqueducts already mentioned, the pantheon, the circus of Romulus, and the circus Maximus, the coliseum, remains of the theatre of Marcellus, the baths of Agrippa, those of Caracalla, Diocletian, Nero, Titus, &c.; the triumphal arches of Titus, Constantine, and Septimius Severus; the columns of Antoninus and Trajan, Egyptian obelisks, the Roman forum, now called Campo Vaccino. Rome was founded about 753 years B. C. In the 2 centuries preceding the Christian era, its dominion extended over all the countries of the Mediterranean, its territories were further extended by the first emperors, but in the fifth century, the barbarians of the N. and E. deprived it of several provs. The city was taken by Alaric in 410, and by Genseric in 455. It passed successively under the dominion of the Ostrogoths and the Emperors of the East; it was given to the Popes by Pepin and Charlemagne in the 8th century, & then became cap. of the States of the church. From 1809 till 1814, it was cap. of the dep. Rome in the French empire. In 1843, an insurrection broke out after the assassination of Count Rossi, the Pope's prime minister, 15th November; the Pope fled in disguise on the 24th. A republican form of government was attempted in 1849, when on the 8th February, the national assembly declared the Pope divested of all temporal power, but this was overturned by the intervention of a French force, which now (1850), has possession of Rome.

RUSSELLVILLE, numerous vills. of the United States, the principal in Kentucky, between Green and Cumberland rivers, 140 m. S.W. Frankfort. Pop. about 1,300.

RUSSIA (EMPIRE OF), is the largest state in the world, extending in Europe, Asia, and America, betw. lat.  $47^{\circ} 30'$  &  $78^{\circ} 20' N.$ , lon.  $18^{\circ} E.$  to  $130^{\circ} W.$  Its surface is estimated to comprise 1-30th of the whole superficies of the globe, 1-7th of its land, & more than double the extent of Europe; but it is thinly peopled, the proportion being about one-half of the relative pop. of the globe. The cap. of the whole is St Petersburg. The Russian empire contains a greater number of distinct races than any other country; comprising Slavonians, Lettons, Germans, Caucasians, Jews, Walachians, Greeks, Persians, Indians, Samoyedes, Tartars, Tnguses, and Turks. The established religion of the empire is that of the Greek church, which is estimated to comprise 47,000,000 of the pop., the remainder being Roman Catholics, Lutherans, Reformed Churchmen, Moravians, Mohammedans, Jews, Budbists, &c., or 9-10ths professing Christians, and 1-10th heathens. It is usual to treat of the empire as divided into European, Asiatic, and American Russia, although these divisions are not officially recognised, and several of the govts., as Perm and Orenburg, are partly in Europe and partly in Asia. The relative area and population of the empire, according to the latest estimate, is given in the table at the end. European Russia extends from the N. slope of the Caucasus mntns., lat.  $40^{\circ} 20'$ , to Lapland, lat.  $70^{\circ} 16' N.$ ; and, including the kingdom of Poland, from lon.  $18^{\circ}$  to the W. slope of the Ural mntns., gov. Perm, lon.  $60^{\circ} 45' E.$  It is bounded E. by Siberia and the Caspian Sea, S. by Asiatic Russia, the Black Sea, and the Ottoman and Austrian empires, W. by Moldavia, Austria, Prussia, the Baltic, and Sweden, and N. by the Arctic Ocean. The surface of Russia may be considered as one vast plain, enclosed by the Ural mntns. on the E., the Caucasus on the S., and partly by the Carpathians on the W.; it opens to the Caspian Sea on the S.E. and the level countries of N. Germany on the W.; throughout its vast extent, it does not contain a single mntn.; the highest point betw. the Baltic and the Black Sea near Kremenetz, is 1,328 ft. in height; the Baltic provs. have a mean elevation of 1,000 ft. above the Baltic. The centre of the country is occupied by a dome-shaped elevation traversed by the Valdai hills, the average height of which is 800 to 900 ft., and the summit 1,100 ft. above the sea; these sink rapidly to the S.E., where they are lost in marshes. Russia is traversed by the largest rivers in Europe; these form the great N. and S. basins, the water-shed between which is not marked by mountains, but by slightly undulating ground; the Baltic receives the Tornea, Kemi, Ulea, Kumo, Neva, Narva, Duna, Niemen, and Vistula; the Arctic Ocean receives the Paswig, Kola, Petchora; and, by the White Sea, the Vigo, Onega, Dwina, Mezen; the Black Sea receives the Danube, Dniester, Dnieper, Don, and Kuban; the Caspian Sea, the Oural, Volga, Kuma, and Terek. In the N. of Russia, there are numerous and extensive lakes; the chief are lake Ladoga, the largest in Europe; lake Onega, in the gov. Olonetz; lakes Sajma, Payama, and Kolgis in Finland; Peipus between the govts. Revel, Riga, Pskov, and Petersburg; Ilmen in the gov. Novgorod, and Enara in Lapland. The smaller lakes Bielo, in Novgorod, Koubinskoe or Koubensh in Volgda, are important for the internal navig. of the empire. The most valuable of the salt lakes is Elton in Saratov. Among the numerous islands belonging to the empire, the chief are the group of Novia Zemlia (new land), in the Arctic Ocean, the archipelago of Spitzbergen which is claimed by Russia, Kalguef, and Waigatz islands. Geological phenomena, confirmed by history and tradition, warrant the conclusion that a great portion of Central Russia was under the sea at a very recent period. The soil comprises every variety, much of which is unfit for cultivation. The vast region of the tundras extending from lat.  $64^{\circ} N.$  to the N. coast, is a swamp in summer, and is covered with ice for nine months in the year; it only produces moss. S.W. of this, the country for a space of 150,000 sq. m., is covered with forests of pine, larch, and birch. The isthmus of Finland, between the White Sea and the Gulfs of Finland and Bothnia, a space occupying 500 m. in length, & 400 in breadth, is covered with lakes interspersed with rocks and sand hills; while in the S.E. an immense desert, called a steppe, extends between the Ural and the Volga, estimated to contain 330,000 sq. m.; a portion of it affords tolerable pastures. W. of lon.  $46^{\circ}$ , a series of salt lakes occupy a hollow space, which probably once formed a portion of the Caspian Sea. This steppe is exposed to the greatest extremes of climate; in winter the thermometer is generally  $15^{\circ}$  and sometimes  $35^{\circ}$  below zero, while in summer the heat is upwards of  $100^{\circ}$  Fahr. From its vast extent, Russia has a great diversity of climate; the plains of the N. exposed to the winds of the Arctic Ocean, are much colder than the other countries of Europe in corresponding latitudes. The whole of the N. coast from lat.  $66^{\circ}$  on the White Sea, S.E. to lat.  $62^{\circ} N.$ , lon.  $59^{\circ} E.$ , has a temp. below the freezing point, & the surface is constantly frozen. Betw. this frozen space & lat.  $58^{\circ} N.$ , the mean temperature varies from  $32^{\circ}$  to  $40^{\circ}$ ; at St Petersburg, which is within this space, the thermometer in December and January sinks to  $22^{\circ}$  below zero, while in summer it rises to  $85^{\circ}$  or  $90^{\circ}$ . S. of lat.  $58^{\circ}$ , the mean temperature is between  $40^{\circ}$  and  $55^{\circ}$ ; the winters are short and severe, summers long and hot. In the interior, S.S.E. and S. winds prevail, while W. and N.W. winds are most common on the coasts. Rain is most abundant in the Baltic provs., where the average annual fall is 15 to 20 in. The amount and frequency decrease in proceeding from

l. to E., and during the long summer of the S. rows, rain very seldom falls. Snow falls early in winter,—the average number of days in the year in which snow falls at St Petersburg, is 70.

Russia produces all the plants common to the east countries of Europe. Corn is raised more than necessary for consumption, and is extensively exported, although agriculture is in its infant state. Rye is the chief crop, and is very widely raised; the cultivation of barley extends to lat. 67°, and oats to lat. 62° N.; wheat is grown chiefly in the Ukraine. The countries of central Russia, in the upper basin of the Volga, are the most fertile in the empire; and its western portion, comprising the govts. of Nijnii-Novgorod, Penza, Kasan, & Simbirsk, is called the granary of Russia. Hemp & flax are extensively raised chiefly on the Upper Volga; tobacco is cultivated principally in the Ukraine; excellent grapes are grown in the Crimea, and on the lower course of the Don and Volga, and the manufacture of wine from them has been recently much improved. The forests yield valuable produce, and building timber, tar, pitch, and potash, are widely exported. Black cattle and sheep are extensively reared; tallow and hides are exported in great quantities; sheep-skins furnish the dress of many of the peasantry, but the wool is of inferior quality. The horses of the S. and central provs. are large, in the N. they are small, those of the Cossack tribes are capable of enduring great fatigue. Camels are kept in large herds by the nomadic tribes in the steppes. The bison is found near the sources of the Naev; the reindeer is confined to the region N. of lat. 66° N.; the elk, wild hog, deer, and hare, are found in the forests of the N.; and the fur-bearing animals are actively hunted. In addition to the birds common to other countries of Europe, the capercaillie is found in the N., and the pelican in the S., on the shores of the Black and Caspian Seas; geese and ducks abound in the lakes. Fish is plenty in the rivers, especially in the Volga and the Ural, and in the White Sea and the Sea of Azov. In the Arctic Ocean, on the shores of Novaia Zemlia, the whale and seal are fished. The E. part of Russia is rich in minerals; the two govts. of Orenburg and Perm, and especially the latter, have numerous mines of gold, platinum, and copper; silver does not occur in European Russia; iron abounds in the provs. In the mining dists. of the Ural, the copper is flourishing and industrious; the utmost activity is manifested, forests have been cleared, marshes drained, and the gorges of mountains have been filled with artificial lakes, water being the chief moving power. The mining establishments, whether imperial or private, resemble the manufacturing towns of Europe, and the manufacture of damasked steel equals that of Sheffield or Birmingham. Salt is extensively made in the provs. Perm and Viatka, and in the W., south of Lake Ilmen. Lignite and brown coal occur in S. Russia, in the Crimea, & on the W. of the Ural mountains; the coal field on the Donetz is estimated 100 m. long, and several feet deep. Coal beds of immense extent were discovered in the gov. of Moscow in 1844. Since the time of Peter the Great, the progress of manufactures in Russia has been most rapid. In 1812, there were only 2,332 factories and 119,093 workmen in the empire; in 1828, the number of factories was 5,244, and of workmen 255,414; and in 1839, there were 6,855 factories with 412,931 workmen: they are still rapidly on the increase, and the improvements in their products have been commensurate with their progress. The gov. of Moscow is the centre of manufacturing industry, and next to it are the govts. Vladimir, Tula, Nijnii-Novgorod, Tambov, Kaluga, and Olonetz. The staple manufactures are woollens, silks, linens, cottons, metal wares, soap and candles, besides which the manufacture of glass, paper, porcelain, arms, jewellery, and morocco leather, rival those of the best products of Europe. Most of the articles used by the peasantry are made in the villages, one of which is usually devoted to a single branch of industry. In the kingdom of Poland, the chief manufactures are of woollens, linens, leather, and fur goods. The commerce of Russia is greatly facilitated by its numerous navigable rivers, and its vast and excellent system of canals, by means of which, not only do the Baltic and the White Sea communicate with the Caspian and the Black Sea, but the great lakes & the principal rivers are united into a complete system of inland navigation. There are two great public companies, one instituted in 1823, for establishing steam-packets on the Volga, the Kamä, and the Caspian Sea; and the other, established in 1824, for the steam navigation of the great rivers of the interior, the Black Sea, & the Baltic. The American Commercial Company, created in 1797, has establishments in Russian America, and at Moscow, Kazan, Tomsk, Irkutsk, and Kamtschatka. The only railways yet completed (1852), are those from Warsaw, by Czenstochan and Cracow, joining the great Austrian and German lines at Kosel, and the great line from St Petersburg to Moscow. Moscow is the centre of internal commerce; and the chief seaports are St Petersburg, with Kronstadt, Riga on the Baltic, Archangel on the White Sea, Astrakhan on the Caspian Sea, and Odessa on the Black Sea. The principal exports are tallow, hides, hemp, lint, iron, copper, linseed, building timber, wax, potash, train oil, skins, furs, and morocco leather. Imports, wine, cotton, silk, fine woollens, dyeing materials, tea, sugar, coffee, and other colonial produce, and machinery. In Russia all power emanates from the emperor or czar, who is head of the church, and whose authority is absolute; all rank is based on the tenure of civil or military office. The nobility are a privileged class, they have great political power, and possess nearly all the land of the country. European Russia is divided into 49 govts. and 12 provs., besides the country of the Don Cossacks, a kind of military republic, the grand duchy of Finland, the kingdom of Poland, and several countries in the Caucasus, Siberia, &c.; some of which are actually, and others only nominally, dependent on Russia. The educational establishments are dependent on the government, and are placed under a minister of public instruction; they consist of district schools, parish, theological, and special schools, which in all amount to about 4,856. In 1844, there were 73 gymnasia with 19,453 pupils; but, besides these there are numerous military & theological academies & seminaries, and great progress in education has been made within the last half century; however, it is estimated that only 1 in 143 of the population are under instruction, while in Prussian Saxony, the proportion is 1 in 6. In Poland there were, in 1844, only 10 gymnasia with 4,001 pupils. The university of Warsaw has been suppressed. The army of Russia is maintained at comparatively little expense; the number of effective troops was estimated, in 1846, at 603,000 men. In 1841, the navy comprised 4 ships of the line of 110 guns, 27 of 84, and 19 of 74 guns; 48 frigates, with steam-packets, corvettes, and gun-boats. In 1846, the revenue of Russia, exclusive of Poland and Finland, was estimated at 354,268,000 paper roubles (25 roubles equal to 1*l.* sterling); and in 1849, the debt was estimated at 326,675,853 roubles, but these calculations are very uncertain.—Great Russia, is the N. and middle portion of the empire in Europe, formerly called Muscovy.—White Russia, a portion of Lithuania.—Black Russia, the W. part of do.—New Russia, a region in the S., comprising the territories of the Cossacks.—Little Russia, in the S.W.—Red Russia, now forms a part of Anstrian and Russian Poland (Galicia and Poland), for the govts. into which these now are divided, see table.

N., bounded on the E. by British America, S. and W. by the Pacific Ocean, and N. by the Arctic Ocean; and the following island groups: Prince of Wales island, Duke of York Archipelago, George III. Archipelago, the Kodiak islands, and the Aleutian islands. The principal settlement is New Archangel, a small town with 1,000 inhabs., on the island Sitka, the largest of the group of George III., which is called Baranov by the Russians, & was named George III. by Vancouver.
